PREFACE

THIS book has been prepared primarily for class-room use. It has grown out of a need felt by the author for a brief and practical statement of the fundamental principles of Middle English Grammar as they affect Chaucer's English, combined with a trustworthy text of some of the best of Chaucer's writing, through which students might obtain an introduction to Middle English literature. No book of this sort, containing the most recent results of scholarship in this field and written in English for English-speaking students, is now accessible to either teacher or student. And because of this want students are allowed to put into Chaucer's mouth a sort of broken English that is no more like his own easy-running deftly shaded speech than is the broken German of a schoolboy who has had a six months' course in Ollendorf like the language of Goethe and Schiller. We should laugh at the reader of Wordsworth who should produce what would be represented in New English spelling by,

“Ee wondred lawnely ass a cloudy”

as his version of

“I wandered lonely as a cloud.”

Yet worse travesties of Chaucer's speech than this of Wordsworth's are allowed to pass muster in our reading and so-called appreciation of the Canterbury Tales.

The work naturally divides itself in two parts, a general survey of Middle English Grammar as represented by Chaucer, and a critical text of the Prologue, Knichtes Tale, and Nonnes Preestes Tale, with Notes and Glossary. A full index has been added to the grammar, so that it may be readily used for purposes of reference.

Much pains has been spent upon the text, which has been carefully collated with the copies of the Mss. printed by the Chaucer Society, studied in the light of their now known relations. The Ellesmere Ms. has been taken for the basis, because it and the Hengwrt are the only Mss. which consistently represent Chaucer's inflections, and the Hengwrt is in some respects inferior to the Ellesmere text. It would have been well to have printed the cesural pauses as they are found in these Mss. But the principle followed is to give as few aids as possible in the text itself, and thus force the student to a continual application of his knowledge of Middle English in general. For that reason no marks save those of ordinary punctuation have been used. The essential variants (and by 'essential' is meant those that are not mere permissible variations of spelling or obvious corruptions of inferior Mss. whose originals are known) are given in each instance at the foot of the page. The student should not try to make use of them, however, until he has mastered the relations of the Mss. (see pp. cxix ff.).

It is a matter of regret that the notes had to be made so brief. Chaucer requires more annotation than Middle English poets generally do; for much of his naïvete is quite unintelligible without an explanation of the allusions and associations involved. It is to be regretted also that an account of Chaucer's works, the dates of their composition, their sources and characteristics, the relations of the Mss. in which they have come down to us, etc., could not be included. But the book has had to be kept within textbook limits, and these subjects will be found treated with reasonable clearness and accuracy in the Globe Chaucer.

In preparing the Glossary and the Index I have been greatly helped by one of my pupils in the University of Texas, Miss Mary Heard. As to indirect obligations, my chief one is to the teaching of Professor Napier, of Oxford, and of the late Professor Zupitza, of Berlin, who first made me see the real meaning of scientific method in English study. My indebtedness to Dr. Furnivall's life of untiring and unselfish zeal in making Chaucer material accessible to Chaucer students is one which is so obvious as scarcely to need explicit recognition in a book like this.

In conclusion, I might say almost with discouragement that the best part of a good school book is in the teacher who uses it, and that after all mere print can do little to vitalize the knowledge of our language and literature as they should be vitalized for us. Much, therefore, will depend on the teacher, to whom the book is offered as a help toward the accomplishment of this great end.

THE ELEMENTS OF MIDDLE ENGLISH GRAMMAR WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO CHAUCER'S IDIOM

Introductory Note. — In the following treatment of Chaucer's language the effort has been made to present the subject in such a way that the book may be used as an elementary grammar of Middle English. The dialects have, therefore, been kept in the background, and Chaucer's speech has been assumed to be normal Middle English.

While the grammar is reasonably complete, it is by no means exhaustive. The subject-matter has been condensed into the briefest possible space, and much has been left to the teacher to expand and illustrate.

The treatment is historical, and the student who would use the book to the best advantage should start with a knowledge of the rudiments of Old English, especially of Old English Inflections. The chapter on Sounds is treated in a rigidly historical way, starting from Old English. But there is inserted into it (§§ 9-45) a very brief and summary discussion of the relation of New English sounds to those of Middle English, so that the student who knows no Old English can work back to Chaucer's English from his knowledge of his own speech. If he does this circumspectly and systematically, he will soon learn to appreciate the difference between the writing of New English (which is to a large extent the representation of New English words by their Middle English equivalents) and the actual living forms of New English. The chapters on Inflection, Syntax, and Versification can easily be mastered without any knowledge of the corresponding subjects of Old English Grammar, and have been written with that intent.

The illustrative material is drawn almost entirely from the Prologue and Knights Tale, as that is the part of Chaucer best adapted to elementary teaching. The Arabic numerals, when no further reference is given, refer therefore to Group A of the Canterbury Tales; the other references are to the Globe Chaucer, a copy of which the student should have easy access to.

PART I.—SOUNDS

THE DIALECTS OF MIDDLE-ENGLISH

§ 1. The history of English may be roughly divided into three periods, —

Old-English (O.E.), up to 1125 A.D.

Middle-English (M.E.), 1125–1550 A.D.

New-English (N.E.), 1550 to the present day.

Chaucer's English stands near the middle of the middle period. The chief characteristic which distinguishes M.E. from O.E. is the weakening of the full vowels a, o, and u in unaccented syllables to e. But the language has undergone many other changes by the time it gets into Chaucer's hands. A number of vowels that were short in O.E. are now long, and some O.E. long vowels have been shortened; changes have occurred, too, in the quality of the vowels, giving rise to new sounds unknown to O.E.; the inflection system has been simplified; many old words have taken on new meanings, and many new ones have been added from Romance and Scandinavian sources; syntax has become more flexible, more versatile; and a new metrical system of versification is rapidly taking the place of the old alliterative rhythm.

§ 2. The Dialects of Middle-English. — The four dialects of O.E. split up into five in M.E., viz., Northern (N.), East Midland (E. Midl.), West Midland (W. Midl.), South Western (S.W.), and Kentish (Kn.), all of which were during the M.E. period in use as vehicles of literary expression.

Already in Chaucer's day, however, the dialect of London, which nearly corresponded to the E. Midl. speech, the historical successor of the O.E. of Mercia, was beginning to be looked upon as standard English. By the middle of the following century it was recognized as the standard dialect of literature, and has remained so to this day. Chaucer's language, therefore, E. Midl. with some Kn. forms, is in its outward aspect more nearly like modern English than the other M.E. dialects are.

THE SOUNDS OF CHAUCER'S ENGLISH

§ 3. The Vowels were as follows: —

- ā . . . sounded as in father . . . . . e.g. bathed, 3.
 ǣ . . . sounded as in German mann (a rare sound in Mn. E.) . . . . . e.g. that, 1. ē (close) sounded as a in name or ea in break, without the slight i-sound which follows and makes these sounds diphthongal (nēim, brēik); <sup>1</sup> not heard in Mn. E. . . . . e.g. slepen, 10.
 ē (open) sounded as ea in breath protracted . . e.g. heeth, 6.
 ě . . . sounded as e in met . . . . . e.g. hem, 18.
 ī (ȳ) . . sounded as i in machine or e in he, or ie in field . . . . . e.g. shires, 15.
 ī (ȳ̄) . . sounded as i in pin (perhaps somewhat closer) . . . . . e.g. his, 5. ō (close) sounded as o in note, without the slight u-sound which follows . . . . . e.g. roote, 2.
 ō (open) sounded as a in all, oa in broad, or aw in law . . . . . e.g. euerychon, 31.
 ȝ . . . sounded as o in not, hot . . . . . e.g. croppes, 7.
 ū (ou, ow, o) . sounded as oo in boot, fool . . e.g. droghte, 2;
     fooles, 9;

<sup>1</sup> See § 37.

- ū (o)<sup>1</sup> . sounded as u in full . . . . . e.g. sonne, 7; ful, 22.
ū . . . sounded as in Fr. user . . . . . e.g. vertu, 4.
ũ . . . sounded as ū, but with short quantity . e.g. Caunterbury, 27.
e in unaccented syllables had probably the sound of a very wide and open ɛ, cf. § 78.

§ 4. The Diphthongs were as follows:—

- ai (ay) . sounded as i in pine, line . . . . . e.g. day, 19.
au (aw) . sounded as ou in house . . . . . e.g. draughte, 135.
ei (ey) . is the same as ai (ay) in Chaucer . e.g. alway, 353.
ēu (ew) = ē + u sounded together with emphasis on the first element . . . . . e.g. knew, 240.
ĕu (ew) = ĕ + u sounded together with emphasis on the first element . . . . . e.g. lewed, 502.
oi (oy) . sounded as in boy, noise . . . . . e.g. coy, 119.
ōu (ow) = ō + u sounded together with emphasis on the first element, nearly as in know<sup>2</sup> . . . . . e.g. vnknowe, 126.

§ 5. The Middle-English Consonant-Sounds were nearly the same as those of N.E. But there were no “silent” consonants as in N.E.,<sup>3</sup> save that gn probably represented simple n. r was trilled. Medial and final h (written gh in M.E.) after a palatal vowel had the sound of German ch in ich, and after a guttural vowel the sound of German ch in ach.<sup>4</sup> s and th (also written þ) when medial between vowels and next voiced consonants were voiced (i.e. had the sound of s and th in N.E. those); when final and next voiceless

<sup>2</sup> Theoretically there are three different ou diphthongs in M.E. according as the first element is ō, ō̄, or ō̆; the first two of these Chaucer rhymed together, but ō̆u had a sound different from either, and has always remained different; cf. N.E. thought (Orm. þohhte) and N.E. grow (O.E. grōwan).

consonants they were voiceless (i.e. had the sound of s in N.E. this, and th in N.E. thing).<sup>1</sup> For peculiarities of writing see § 8.

§ 6. The Writing of Chaucer's English. — The vowels were represented as in the examples cited in § 3, which are taken from the Ellesmere Ms. of the Prologue. The long vowels ā, ē, and ō are frequently written double;<sup>2</sup> but the scribes make no attempt to distinguish between ē and ĕ, ō and ċ, until the end of the M.E. period. Long ū is written ou. ū always before n or m or u, and sometimes after c (as in coppe 134) or w (as in worthy 43), is written o. ū before a consonant is usually written v. ū before gh is often (especially in the Ellesmere Ms.) written o; sometimes also in French words before n, e.g. naçons 53, sesons 347. i and y are practically interchangeable in Chaucer Mss.: y is especially frequent before n, m, or u.<sup>3</sup> a before n or m and a consonant in words of French origin is sometimes written au.

§ 7. The representation of the diphthongs is that given in the examples cited in § 4. The last element of the diphthong is generally written y or w when final or before a following vowel; but sometimes w appears before a consonant, e.g. bawdryk 116, wantowne 208. ou (like ou = ū) is sometimes written o before gh; e.g. noght 366, wroght 367, foghten (Hn.) 62.

<sup>1</sup> But there are in M.E. some words of French origin where the s is intervocalic with the voiceless sound, though in these cases good scribes generally wrote c; cf. auarice, office 292, with seruyse (: arise) 250, coueitise (: deuyse) A 3883; so chastise, despise. But Iustise, seruise, suffise sometimes appear in El. with c.

<sup>3</sup> It is not used to denote long ī, as is frequently stated; cf. thriēs El. 63, rīden El. Co. Pet. 45, etc.

§ 8. As to the consonants. I (= N.E. j) occasionally represented i before a consonant, e.g. Inne (El.) 41; and regularly the palatal sound of g (dzh) before a, o, and u in words of French origin, e.g. Ioye, Iuge,— in this position it was sometimes written i. v (i.e. voiced f) was usually written u before a following vowel, e.g. yeue. þ (printed th in the text) represented both the voiced and voiceless dental spirant, as in N.E. thing and they; in the Ellesmere Ms. þ is only used occasionally in small words like þat, þe, etc. ʒ of the Mss. represents the sound of y in N.E. young, and also gh, and is printed y or gh in the text in accordance with the history of the words in which it occurs; it sometimes, also, represents -es after t in words of French origin, e.g. þoyntʒ 2971, seruantʒ 101; and in a few words French voiced s, in which case it is printed z. c in words of French origin represented the s-sound before palatal vowels;<sup>1</sup> before guttural vowels and consonants it retained its O.E. value of k. k represented the k-sound before n, before palatal vowels, and generally when doubled or final. ch always had the sound of N.E. ch in church. cch is the doubling of ch (cf. N.E. tch). sch, sh, ssh denoted the sound of N.E. sh. g represented the voiced guttural stop (i.e. the sound of g in N.E. good) before consonants and guttural vowels in native English words: O.E. g before palatal vowels had become M.E. y (see § 80); g therefore has the palatal sound (viz. that of dge in N.E. bridge) only before palatal vowels in words of French origin,<sup>2</sup> e.g. gai, geste: before a, o, and u in such words the palatal g-sound is represented by I.<sup>1</sup> gg in English words had usually the palatal sound; in the few cases where a guttural vowel follows the gg in O.E., or where it is of O.N. origin, it is guttural, e.g. frogge, O.E. frogga. gn in Chaucer practically represents n. y as a consonant represented the sound of y in N.E. young (i.e. j; cf. § 80 (a)). ci, si represented s + i; e.g. na-ci-oun, con-di-ci-on (not nēi-shən, etc.). tu likewise was simply t + ü; e.g. na-tü-re, cre-a-tü-re, etc. (not nēi-chər, etc.).

A COMPARISON OF THESE SOUNDS WITH THOSE OF NEW ENGLISH

The fact that we still use so many of the written forms of Chaucer's time to represent New-English words which are entirely different, makes it difficult for the student to avoid putting his New-English into the mouth of Chaucer. A clear statement, therefore, of the differences between Middle-English sounds and those of New-English may not be out of place here. With a knowledge of these differences it will be easy in most cases to come near the sound of Chaucer's words, even though the student be unfamiliar with Old-English.

§ 9. The vowels of stressed syllables. — ǣ became æ in the seventeenth century; cf. M.E. man, that with N.E. 'mæn,' 'thæt.' But

- (a) ǣ + l final and l + cons. in the sixteenth century developed an ũ before the l and united with it in the diphthong au, which has become q̄ along with other

<sup>1</sup>g in the combination ng had the palatal sound in M.E., when a j followed in Germanic. The sound is still preserved in N.E. in these cases, and written -nge; e.g. M.E. sengen (Gmc. **sangian*), N.E. singe as compared with M.E. singen, N.E. sing.

au's (cf. § 24), e.g. N.E. 'q̄l,' 'f̄ql,' as against Chaucer's alle, falle.

- (b) before r final and r followed by a consonant N.E. ǎ has the sound of M.E. ǎ followed by ə<sup>1</sup>; if before a vowel (rr may be mere indication of shortness of a preceding vowel), it follows the regular development of ǎ; cf. bark ('baerk') with barrel ('bærəl') < M.E. barel.
- (c) e.M.E. ǎ before a nasal + cons. > ǎ̃ (cf. § 61).
- (d) ǎ was lengthened to ā in the last part of the sixteenth century before st,<sup>2</sup> sk, sp, th, ss.<sup>2</sup>
- (e) w rounds a following ǎ into ǔ (when unstressed, ə), except before a following guttural consonant; cf. squadron ('skwodrən') and wag ('wæg').

§ 10. ā has become a diphthong in N.E., viz. ēi, with the stress on the first element;<sup>3</sup> cf. M.E. māke > N.E. 'mēik,' M.E. Mārie > N.E. 'Mēiry,' M.E. dāme > N.E. 'dēim.' Shakspeare still uses a number of the ā-forms.

§ 11. ě has remained unchanged; except that

- (a) before r and a consonant, M.E. ě in many instances has developed into an ǎ, e.g. M.E. sterre > N.E. star<sup>4</sup>;

and that

- (b) the late M.E. development through which ě > ǎ + ng, nk in many words went further in N.E., so

<sup>1</sup> In the English of southern England and that of parts of America the r is dropped and the a lengthened to ā.

<sup>3</sup> But we still write the M.E. word in almost all these cases and those that follow.

<sup>4</sup> In some cases the English of America has a development from the ě-form, while that of England has the ǎ-form; cf. the English and American N.E. forms of M.E. clerc, viz. 'clerk,' and 'clāk.'

that in almost all native words where e came before ng, nk it developed into N.E. i; e.g. M.E. English > N.E. 'Inglish' with M.E. spelling.

§ 12.  $\bar{e}$  developed into a-diphthongal N.E.  $\bar{i}$  (see § 33); e.g. M.E. grēne > N.E. 'grīn,' M.E. swēte > N.E. 'swīt.'

§ 13.  $\bar{e}$  became  $\bar{e}$  in the sixteenth century, but did not develop into  $\bar{i}$  until the eighteenth century; e.g. e.N.E. sea, does not rhyme with e.N.E. be in Spenser or Shakespeare.

The distinction between  $\bar{e}$  and  $\bar{e}$  which was introduced into late M.E. writing is still kept up in our spelling, though the sounds themselves are now in most cases identical; e.g. N.E. steal (M.E. stēle) and N.E. steel (M.E. stēl). This fact is of great assistance in determining whether  $\bar{e}$  is  $\bar{e}$  or  $\bar{e}$  in Chaucer.<sup>1</sup>

§ 14.  $\check{i}$  corresponds as a rule to N.E.  $\check{i}$ .

§ 15.  $\bar{i}$  has uniformly become ai, though still written i. There are traces of the old  $\bar{i}$ -sound in Spenser; cf. M.E. fīnde with N.E. 'faind,' M.E. pīn with N.E. 'pain,' M.E. nīght with N.E. 'nait.'

§ 18.  $\bar{p}$  has become N.E.  $\bar{p}^u$ ; cf. M.E. b̄p̄t and N.E. boat.

The distinction between M.E.  $\bar{o}$  and  $\bar{p}$  is still preserved in the N.E. spelling, the latter being represented by oa, the former by oo.

§ 19.  $\bar{u}$  has remained in a few words like N.E. fūll, but in most cases, especially in unstressed syllables and in words without sentence-stress, it has become  $\bar{a}$ ; cf. M.E. būte, Shakspeare būt, N.E. 'bət'; M.E. cuppe, N.E. 'cəp.'

§ 20.  $\bar{u}$  has in almost all cases, no matter what its origin, become au, though the M.E. form is still written; e.g. M.E. now (= nū), N.E. 'nau' (written now), M.E. hous, N.E. 'haus' (house), M.E. droghte, N.E. 'draut' (drought).<sup>2</sup>

§ 21.  $\bar{u}$  in late M.E. became the diphthong eu, thence N.E. iu, e.g. M.E. usen, N.E. 'iuz' (still written use), falling together with the diphthong iu, which arose when the first element of  $\bar{e}u > i$ . In the eighteenth century, after l or r or j, this iu > ū. This development is now extending in America to iu after d, n, s, and t; cf. new 'nū' duke 'dūk,' etc.

§ 22.  $\bar{u}$  fell together with  $\bar{u}$  and  $> \bar{a}$  in both English words (out of S.W. dialect) and French words; e.g. burden (O.E. byrðen), judge (M.E. jüuggen).

§ 23. ai, ei  $>$  N.E.  $\bar{e}i$ , with stress on the first element; e.g. day, weigh.

<sup>1</sup> But is still written oo. It is often shortened to  $\bar{u}$  in N.E. before final t or d or k. For diphthongal element, see § 33.

<sup>2</sup> The student will therefore be able to distinguish the M.E.  $\bar{u}$ , which is written ou (or o before gh), from the ou diphthong by the sound which the former has in N.E.

§ 24. au became N.E.  $\bar{a}$ ; e.g. law, saw.

§ 25. The au referred to in § 62 also developed into N.E.  $\bar{a}$ ; e.g. grant, dance.<sup>1</sup>

§ 26.  $\bar{e}u, \bar{e}u$  became N.E.  $\bar{i}u$ ; e.g. knew, few (cf. § 21).<sup>2</sup>

§ 27.  $\bar{o}u, \bar{q}u$  became late N.E.  $\bar{o}u$ ; e.g. know, soul.

§ 28.  $\bar{ou}$  became late N.E.  $\bar{o}$ ; e.g. brought.

§ 29. oi (only in French words) corresponds to late N.E. oi.<sup>3</sup>

§ 30. ui, often written u in M.E., became  $\bar{u}$ , then iu, as above; cf. § 21.

§ 31. Thus, with only N.E. to guide him, the student can in most cases distinguish between  $\bar{e}$  and  $\bar{e}$ ,  $\bar{o}$  and  $\bar{o}$ ,  $\bar{u}$  and ou,  $\bar{i}$  and  $\bar{u}$ ,  $\bar{o}u$  and  $\bar{ou}$ , in Chaucer's English. To distinguish between  $\bar{o}u$  and  $\bar{q}u$ , or between  $\bar{e}u$  and  $\bar{e}u$ , requires a knowledge of O.E.

§ 32. There are at least two grades of stress (often called accent) in N.E., viz. primary and secondary. The principles just given refer to vowels of primarily stressed syllables. Vowels in secondarily stressed syllables of M.E. have in many cases lost their stress in N.E. and follow the laws of vowels in unstressed syllables.

§ 33. Vowels in unstressed syllables all tend to become a very wide and open  $\bar{a}$  if originally guttural, and a very wide and open  $\bar{i}$  if originally palatal.<sup>4</sup> Diphthongs and

<sup>3</sup> In Elizabethan English it had the sound of ai which is still heard in the vulgar 'bail' for 'boil.'

diphthongal long vowels in N.E. are accented on the first element, which makes the second element come under this law.

§ 34. Vowels in unstressed syllables of inflection are lost in N.E., whether final or protected by a consonant, unless preserved for phonetic reasons.

§ 35. The New-English consonant system is essentially that of M.E. The following are some of the chief differences. Consonants are doubled in N.E. spelling, as in late M.E., but more frequently, to show that the preceding vowel is short; and a -e is often added after a single consonant to show that the preceding vowel is long. These are, therefore, only apparent differences.

§ 36. When M.E. w became final in N.E. from the dropping of the final -e, it developed a diphthong ow in late M.E., cf. falow (a) 1364, which early became ɔ, though still written ow; e.g. M.E. shadwe > N.E. shadow, M.E. felawe, felwe > N.E. fellow. Inorganic initial w is prefixed to several common words; e.g. M.E. on > N.E. one ('wən'); M.E. hool > N.E. whole (here only in the writing).

§ 37. l after ǣ or ǒ (see §§ 9 a, 16) is generally lost before f, v, m, or k, though still written; e.g. N.E. folk, golf, talk, calm. b final after m is lost in N.E.; e.g. climb, comb.

§ 38. r final or before a consonant varies in N.E. from a slightly trilled sound to a mere vowel glide which is subject to absorption in a preceding vowel.

§ 39. t in words where it was followed by a j-sound (including that of ju < ü) united with it and > ch in the eighteenth century; e.g. question.

§ 40. d in similar positions united with the j-sound to become dg; e.g. verdure.

§ 41. s followed by a j-sound united with it in sh; e.g. nācioun ('nāsiūn') > 'neishən.'

§ 42. In words like nation, the t represents an s, written c in M.E., and is due to an attempt to imitate the Latin form of such words.

§ 43. d > th in a number of words in late M.E., so we have Chaucer's fader against N.E. father; likewise mother, weather, hither, thither, etc.

§ 44. h (gh), though still written, is lost in N.E. In some cases dialect forms in which gh > f and shortened the preceding vowel, are found in spoken M.E., though the gh-forms are written; e.g. N.E. rough, tough.

§ 45. Some unhistoric consonants were developed for phonetic reasons in N.E. Chief of these are

- (a) an unhistoric t which often appears after the adverbial suffix -es; e.g. M.E. againes > N.E. against;
- (b) an unhistoric t which appears after nouns ending in n; e.g. M.E. parchemen > N.E. parchment;
- (c) an unhistoric d which appears after final n in a few words; e.g. M.E. soun > N.E. sound, M.E. kynrede 1286 > N.E. kindred;
- (d) an unhistoric b which appears after a final m; e.g. lim > N.E. limb. This was due to confusion arising from still writing b after it had been lost; cf. § 37.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF MIDDLE-ENGLISH SOUNDS FROM THOSE OF OLD-ENGLISH

CHANGES IN THE QUANTITY OF VOWELS

§ 46. Group-Lengthenings. — Certain O.E. short vowels were lengthened in M.E. by certain consonant groups, viz.: —

§ 47. Any short vowel save u before ld; e.g. O.E. eald (Merc. ǣld) > M.E. ǣld,<sup>1</sup> O.E. fēld > M.E. fēld (N.E.

field), O.E. cīld > M.E. chīld; cf. O.E. bylda (builder), and M.E. (S.W. dialect) būlden, builden.<sup>1</sup>

§ 48. ī and ū before nd; cf. O.E. bīndan > M.E. bīnden (N.E. 'baind'), O.E. fūnden (pp.) > M.E. founden (N.E. 'faund').

§ 49. ī and ā before mb; e.g. O.E. clīmban > M.E. clīmben (N.E. 'claim'), O.E. cāmb > M.E. cq̄mb.

§ 50. Some lengthenings before rd, rn, rth, ng occur in early M.E., but most of them had been given up by Chaucer's time. Traces of them, however, are found in the spelling of the Ellesmere Ms.; cf., too, ērthe : fērthe D 363.

§ 51. Exc. If the lengthening group was immediately followed by a liquid or nasal in the next syllable,<sup>2</sup> the lengthening did not take place; e.g. O.E. tyndre > M.E. tīnder.

§ 52. Stress-Lengthenings. — The O.E. short vowels ǣ, ĕ, ō were lengthened in M.E. if they stood in open accented syllables;<sup>3</sup> e.g. O.E. mācian > M.E. māken (N.E. make), O.E. wērede > M.E. wēred (N.E. wear), O.E. gebōren > M.E. ybōre (N.E. bore); cf. O.E. pp. rīden = M.E. rīden (N.E. ridden).

§ 53. The exceptions are the same as for group-lengthening, but this lengthening frequently takes place in spite of a liquid or nasal in the following syllable; e.g. lādel (< O.E. hlǣdel) 2020.

<sup>3</sup> An open syllable is one that ends in a vowel, a single consonant always making a syllable with the vowel which follows it. The instances where noun-forms other than those of the nominative singular are generalized are only apparent exceptions; e.g. O.E. scēadu, but M.E. shādwe (from oblique case-form sceadw-).

§ 54. This lengthening is also prevented by ig in the following syllable; e.g. O.E. pōpig > M.E. pōppy (N.E. poppy).

§ 55. Shortenings. — O.E. long vowels were shortened in M.E. when they came before two or more consonants, except the lengthening groups mentioned in §§ 46–50;<sup>1</sup> cf. O.E. wīsdōm and M.E. wīsdōm; greet, compar. grētter 863.

§ 56. O.E. long vowels were sometimes shortened in M.E. by the conditions which prevented stress-lengthening; viz. ig or a liquid or nasal in the following syllable; e.g. āny 580, ēny < O.E. ānig.

§ 57. O.E. long vowels are sometimes shortened in words that have light sentence-stress; cf. M.E. indefinite article ān, ǎ, and numeral adjective ḡn with O.E. ān.

§ 58. The Quality of the Vowels thus produced. — The ē that arose by lengthening before ld was the long close vowel ē̄. The ē that arose by stress-lengthening was the long open vowel ē̄. In all cases of lengthening that resulted in ō, it was the long open vowel ō̄ that was produced.

§ 59. Changes in the Character of Vowels. — The chief of these are as follows: —

§ 60. O.E. ā becomes M.E. ḡ (except in Northern dialects); e.g. O.E. brād > M.E. brḡd (N.E. broad).

§ 61. O.E. ǎ (o) + nasal remains in Chaucer, except when the nasal is followed by a voiced consonant d, g, b;<sup>2</sup> in this position it becomes o; cf. thanken and lond (O.E. þancian, land).

<sup>1</sup> The shortening of O.E. ā (= Gmc. ai) results in a sound that is sometimes ǎ and sometimes ě, giving thus double forms; e.g. O.E. lādan (M.E. lēden) has pret. lædde, which gives M.E. lēdde, lādde. So a M.E. pret. clādde, clēdde points to O.E. clāþan, not clāþian (cf. § 175(4)).

§ 62. The au written for a before nasal and consonant in words of French origin probably denoted an open sound of a between  $\check{a}$  and  $\check{q}$ .

§ 63. O.E. y (not representing W.S. ie) underwent different developments in the different dialects, resulting in Kn. e, S.W. u (i.e.  $\ddot{u}$ ), and E.Midl. and Northern i. i is thus the standard form in Chaucer,<sup>1</sup> but the S.W.  $\ddot{u}$  and the Kn. e occur occasionally; e.g. murie 1386, merie C. 883, myrie E. 2218.

§ 64. w sometimes changes a following palatal vowel to u; e.g. M.E. wōmman, from O.E. wīfman, which became e.M.E. wimman; M.E. wurthy or worthy, from O.E. wyrðīg.

§ 66. O.E.  $\bar{a} >$  M.E.  $\bar{e}$  when it represented an original Germanic  $\bar{a}$ , and M.E.  $\bar{e}$  when it represented a Germanic ai (usually appearing in O.E. as umlaut of  $\bar{a}$ ).<sup>4</sup> These sounds of  $\bar{e}$  are still distinguished in modern spelling; cf. § 13.

<sup>1</sup> Chaucer's is the language of London, where a number of dialect forms had already gained currency.

<sup>4</sup> To the student who does not know Germanic, it may be of assistance to note that Gmc.  $\bar{a}$  is generally represented by Mod. Ger.  $\bar{a}$ ; cf. e.g. Mod. Ger. thāt with O.E. dād, M.E. dēd, N.E. deed: and that Gmc. ai appears usually in Mod. Ger. as ei, except before r and h (and w in O.H.G.), where it is  $\bar{e}$ ; cf. Mod. Ger. heilen and O.E. hēlan, M.E. hēlen, N.E. heal.

§ 67. A New Set of Diphthongs in M.E. grew out of the consonants g, h, and w in the following way: —

A. The diphthongs produced by an O.E. *g

§ 68. O.E. g was vocalized to i after a palatal vowel, to u after a guttural vowel, and joined with the preceding vowel to make a diphthong or long vowel as follows: —

I. After a palatal vowel.

- § 69. (a) O.E. ǣg > M.E. ai; e.g. day 19 (O.E. dǣg).
 (b) O.E. ĕg, ǣg > M.E. ēi;<sup>1</sup> e.g. wey 34 (O.E. wĕg), either (O.E. ǣgper).
 (d) O.E. ēog, ĭg, īg, ĵg, or ĵg (when not W.S. ie, īe) > M.E. ī; e.g. O.E. lēogan > M.E. lien (N.E. lie, to tell a falsehood); O.E. līgap > M.E. lieth, lith (N.E. lies, reclines); O.E. nĭgon > M.E. nīne; O.E. drĵge > M.E. drīe.

II. After a guttural vowel.

- § 70. (a) O.E. ǣg > M.E. au (aw); e.g. O.E. lǣgu > M.E. lawe (N.E. law).
 (b) O.E. āg > M.E. ōu (ow); e.g. O.E. āgan > M.E. ōwen (N.E. own).
 (c) O.E. ǫg<sup>3</sup> > M.E. ōu (ow); e.g. O.E. bōga > M.E. bōwe (N.E. bow, 'bōu').

<sup>1</sup> By Chaucer's time the sounds ai and ei have fallen together as ai, but the earlier distinction is still kept up in the writing of good scribes.

<sup>2</sup> In some dialects ēg > ēi > ii > ī; e.g. M.E. teyen, tien (O.E. tēgan, 'tie'). In Anglian dialects ēag > ēg: so here too we have double forms; e.g. ĵe (O.E. ēage): melodĵe 10.

<sup>3</sup> Since the g was not followed by a consonant, and therefore the ǫ was in an open accented syllable and became ō (§ 52).

(d) O.E. ōg, ūg, ūg<sup>1</sup> > M.E. ū (ou, ow); e.g. O.E. būgan > M.E. bowen (N.E. bow, to 'bau').

B. Diphthongs produced by an O.E. h

§ 71. In the case of h, a corresponding parasitic vowel is developed. Here the h is retained and written gh<sup>2</sup> in I.M.E. and N.E. :—

I. After a palatal vowel.

§ 72. (a) O.E. ěh (Angl. ǣh, ěh = W.S. ěah) > M.E. eigh.<sup>3</sup>

(b) O.E. āh with a consonant following was shortened, giving ěh, or ǣh (see § 55, note 1); so e.g. O.E. rāhte > M.E. reighte, raughte (both forms found in Chaucer).

(c) O.E. ēah > eigh, which in some dialects developed into M.E. īgh; <sup>4</sup> cf. § 69 (c), note.

(d) O.E. ēoh, ih, ih, yh, and yh (when not W.S. ie, ie) > M.E. īgh.

II. After a guttural vowel.

§ 73. (a) O.E. ǣh > M.E. augh; e.g. W.S. sǣh > M.E. saugh, saw.

<sup>4</sup> So heigh (O.E. hēah): seigh 1066, and Emelye : hye 2577; cf. the two preterits of flēn, viz. fleigh and flȳ, corresponding to O.E. flēah.

- (b) O.E.  $\bar{a}h^1$  > M.E.  $\bar{q}ugh$ ; e.g. O.E.  $\bar{d}ah$  > M.E. dough (N.E. 'dōu').
- (c) O.E.  $\bar{o}h$ , or  $\bar{o}h$  shortened by a following consonant (§ 55) > M.E.  $\bar{o}ugh$ ; e.g. O.E. sōhte, sōhte > M.E. soughte (N.E. 'sōt').
- (d) O.E.  $\bar{o}h$ ,  $\bar{u}h$ ,  $\bar{u}h$  > M.E.  $\bar{u}gh$  (ough); e.g. O.E. ginōh > M.E. ynough, O.E. brūh > M.E. through, O.E. rūh > M.E. rough.

C. Diphthongs produced by an O.E. w

§ 74. An O.E. w becomes M.E. u after a vowel (written w), and joins with it to make a diphthong whose last element is u.

- § 75. (a) O.E.  $\bar{a}w$  > M.E. au (aw); e.g. O.E. clāwu > M.E. clawe (N.E. claw).
- (b) O.E.  $\bar{a}w$  and  $\bar{o}w$  > M.E.  $\bar{q}u$  and  $\bar{o}u$  respectively (ow); e.g. O.E. cnāwan > M.E. knōwe, O.E. grōwan, > M.E. grōwe; cf. § 4, note 2.
- (c) O.E.  $\bar{e}ow$ ,  $\bar{e}aw$ ,  $\bar{a}w$  > M.E.  $\bar{e}u$  (ew), O.E. eowu > M.E.  $\bar{e}we$ ; e.g. O.E. scēawain > M.E. shēwen, O.E. lāwed > M.E. lēwed (N.E. lewd).
- (d) O.E.  $\bar{e}ow$ ,  $\bar{i}w$ , and  $\bar{i}w$  > M.E.  $\bar{e}u$  (ew); e.g. O.E. cnēow > M.E. knēw (N.E. knew), O.E. hīwa (servant) > M.E. hēwe.

D. Diphthongs produced by an O.E. c

§ 76. Sometimes a diphthong ei is produced by the vocalization of c through an intervening consonant; e.g. O.E. cwencte > M.E. queynte 2334; so bleynte. So fleisshe;

freisshe, threisshe often occur in Chaucer Mss.; e.g. fleisshe 344 is the form in Co, Pe, H<sub>4</sub>.

§ 77. General Remarks on these Diphthongs. — While a full knowledge of the corresponding O.E. word-forms is necessary to distinguish Chaucer's diphthongs, it is possible to learn much from their N.E. sound and spelling.

- (1) If in N.E. spelling the diphthong is followed by gh, it was one of the series produced by h; if not, it was due to the vocalization of g or w.
- (2) Whenever we have the N.E. au-sound, as in house, Chaucer's vowel was  $\bar{u}$ , though written ou, or o before gh.
- (3) Where the sound of the N.E. diphthong is  $\bar{q}$  (bought, etc.), the source of it was  $\bar{o}h + \text{cons}$ .
- (4) Where ough = ɔf, we have the dialectic variant of gh, viz. f, which shortened the  $\bar{u}$ ; so the source was  $\bar{o} + gh$ , or  $\bar{u}, \bar{u} + gh$ .
- (5) Where our N.E. sound of ou (ow) is  $\bar{o}u$  (grow, etc.), we have the descendant of the M.E. diphthong  $\bar{q}u$  or  $\bar{o}u$ , but it is not possible to tell which without a knowledge of O.E.

§ 78. Vowels in unstressed syllables.

- (a) In inflectional syllables, all O.E. vowels became M.E.  $\bar{e}$ . This development changed the entire inflectional system, so that O.E. -ath > M.E. -eth, O.E. -as > M.E. -es, O.E. -u > M.E. -e, O.E. -a > M.E. -e, etc. For instances, see Inflection. Unstressed e is frequently written i or u in the Mss.; e.g. habergeon of El. in 76 appears as habirioun in Gg. and as haburgon in Co. In Chaucer's speech it must have had a close sound, somewhat like that of N.E. i, as he rhymes it frequently with the verb is;<sup>1</sup> e.g. clerkes : clerk is B 4426; deedis : deed is D 1155.

(b) A M.E. unstressed vowel, followed by a single liquid or nasal, and situated between a primarily and a secondarily stressed syllable, is often lost, though usually written; e.g. heuenes or heunes, euerich or euerich, delyuere 84, and considerere 3088.

(c) In M.E. of Chaucer's period the vowel in inflectional syllables of words of more than two syllables is usually lost whether it is final or protected by a consonant. Instances are degrées 1890, langage 2227, worstedē 262, palfreys (: harneys) 2495, bargaynes 282, yēddynges 237, felawe 1192, 1194 (but felawe 395); in compound words: bakemetē 343, felaweship 474, frendshipe 428; in inflection: his ouereste 290, biloued 215, herd 'haired' (: berd) 2518. The e is usually written in the Mss. But when the dropping of the vowel would bring together two consonants not easily pronounced the full form is used; e.g. corages 11. The loss of the vowel of the inflectional syllable, or of final e, in some few instances takes place in dissyllabic forms,<sup>2</sup> especially in words of frequent occurrence, such as auxiliary verbs; e.g. were, hadde, koude, etc. For instances see Inflection.

<sup>1</sup> Final s had not yet acquired its z-sound in Chaucer's time; cf. this : is 1247, 2368; was : bras 366.

- (a) O.E. c > ch before the palatal vowels ǣ, ē, ĕ, ē, ĕa, ēa, ĕo, ēo, ĭ, ī, or their umlauts,<sup>1</sup> while it remains c (k) before the guttural vowels ǣ, ā, ō, ō, ū, ū, and their umlauts; e.g. O.E. cēap > M.E. chēp, O.E. cild > M.E. chīld, O.E. cirice > M.E. chirche; but O.E. corn = M.E. corn, O.E. cynn (y = umlaut of ū) > M.E. kinn.
- (b) This ch is also developed if a j or i followed the c in the prehistoric period of English; e.g. O.E. streccan > M.E. strecchen, O.E. tācan > M.E. tēchen.
- (c) There is a tendency for O.E. final c to become M.E. ch after vowels, especially, after i, and sometimes after l or n; e.g. O.E. pīc > M.E. pīch (N.E. pitch<sup>2</sup>). In some unstressed syllables it is lost; e.g. O.E. ic > M.E. ich, I, O.E. adj. suffix -līc > M.E. -lī.
- (d) O.E. intervocalic c is lost in mād < O.E. macod, N.E. made.
- (e) O.E. sc regularly became M.E. sh; e.g. O.E. sceal > M.E. shal (N.E. shall), O.E. fisc > M.E. fish (N.E. fish).

g

- § 80. (a) O.E. initial g followed by a vowel that was originally palatal developed into a M.E. y (i.e. the sound represented in English by y in such a word as young), which was written y or ȝ; e.g. O.E. giefan (Merc. gefan) > M.E. yeuen. It remained g before <sup>1</sup> This development did not take place in Northern dialects, and in many instances where c is followed by ǣ the M.E. words start from Anglian forms, which had ǣ, not ĕa, in such cases; e.g. O.E. cealf (Merc. calf) > M.E. calf.

- a guttural vowel or the umlaut of a guttural vowel;<sup>1</sup> e.g. M.E. gilden (O.E. gylden, cf. O.E. gold).
- (b) The O.E. prefix ge-, gi-, develops into y- in M.E., which in late M.E. is usually lost.<sup>2</sup> In Chaucer it is used or not, according to the demands of the metre; e.g. yronne (O.E. gerunnen) 8.
- (c) For the development of g after a vowel see §§ 68–70.
- (d) After a liquid g becomes w;<sup>3</sup> e.g. borwe (O.E. dat. beorge) 1622, morwe (O.E. dat. morgenne) 334, folwed (O.E. folgode) 528; so galwes (cf. O.E. gealga) B 3941.
- (e) Similarly h after a liquid > w; e.g. arwes (cf. O.E. earh) 104.

As to the other O.E. consonants in M.E. the principal points are the following:—

w

- § 81. (a) Initial w in O.E. wl- is lost. It survives, however, in wlatsom, B 3814. O.E. hw- is written wh- in M.E. (qu or quh in Northern M.E.).
- (b) There was a tendency in M.E. to drop O.E. w when it came before u or o; e.g. suster 871, soster A 3486 (O.E. sweoster, swuster), M.E. swote beside soote 1.
- (c) w was lost also when ne was > nas, ne were > nere.

<sup>3</sup> Forms in -y, like mary 380 (marrow), bely I 351 (bellows), are due to O.E. forms which had developed a parasitic vowel, i, before the g, **mearyg*, **belig*. (The suffix -bury 16 is from the O.E. dative byrig.) The parasitic vowel in the case of h was u, so that O.E. -uh became M.E. -ūgh (-ough); e.g. O.E. þuruh > M.E. thorough (for thorw cf. § 80 (e)).

- § 82. (a) O.E. final m in unstressed syllables > M.E. n ; e.g. for the nones (O.E. for þām ānes) 379, attendale (O.E. æt þām ealope<sup>1</sup>) D 1349.
- (b) O.E. and M.E. final n can be dropped ; e.g. q̄, q̄n (O.E. ān), mayde (O.E. mægden). In inflectional forms of verbs it is preserved or not, according to the needs of the metre ; e.g. to seken hym 510, to drawen euery wight 842, in order to prevent elision. In the weak forms of adjectives it is always dropped.

- § 83. (a) Medial l is lost before c in q̄che (O.E. ālc, cf. § 79 (c)), which (O.E. hwylc), swiche (later swuch, such, cf. §§ 64, 81 (b), from O.E. swylc).
- (b) Final l is lost in much (O.E. mycel), lite (O.E. lytel).

f, v (u)

- § 84. (a) The labial spirant is voiced when it stands between vowels, and in M.E. is written u. This gives rise to varying stem-forms in inflection ; e.g. nom. lyf, gen. lyues ; cf. yaf and yeuen.
- (b) It is sometimes lost when it stands between two vowels, and the preceding vowel if short is lengthened ; e.g. O.E. hēafod > e.M.E. hēued > M.E. heed (N.E. head), O.E. hlāford > e.M.E. lōquerd > M.E. lōrd, O.E. hlāfdige > e.M.E. lēuedi, lāuedi > M.E. lādy (N.E. lady). So hāde (: spāde 554, : blāde 617) is to be explained from e.M.E. hauede, and not as a forced rhyme.
- (c) f is subject to assimilation, cf. § 87.

th (þ), d

- § 85. (a) Intervocalic th (þ) is dropped in a few words; the most common instances are þr beside þther (O.E. þðor), wher 2397, beside whether.
- (b) Chaucer uses both forms of O.E. cūþe; e.g. kouthe (: Dertemouthe) 390, and koude (: loude) 713.
- (c) th is also subject to assimilation; cf. § 87.
- (d) In gospel (O.E. godspel) 481, and answere (O.E. andswerian) d is lost.

h (written gh when medial or final)

§ 86. Initial h in the O.E. combinations hn, hr, hl, is lost in M.E. For other developments of h see §§ 71, 72, 73.

§ 87. The O.E. Consonant Assimilations are carried still further in M.E. The instances (save æt þe > atte) are chiefly in the contracted forms of the third pers. sing., and in the preterite tenses of weak verbs; see Inflection, §§ 175, 177. O.E. f is assimilated to the following consonant in O.E. wifman > M.E. wimman > womman (cf. § 64), and in O.E. hæfde > M.E. hadde.

§ 88. Unhistoric Consonants. — (a) þ is often inserted in M.E. between m and n; e.g. Somþnour 623 (in H<sub>4</sub>) from O.Fr. Somenour; so emþten (cf. O.E. æmtig), dampnen (O.Fr. damner), nemþnen (O.E. nemnan), solemþne (O.Fr. solemne) 209.

(b) þ likewise is developed between m and r, cf. M.E. slombren and O.E. sluma; and after m, e.g. thombe 563 (O.E. þūma).

(c) d is developed between n and r in M.E. thunder (O.E. þunor); and between l and r in alder (-best) 710 (O.E. ealra-).

OLD-NORSE ELEMENT IN MIDDLE-ENGLISH

§ 89. Most of the Scandinavian loan-words came into English during the late O.E. and early M.E. periods; so that they fall under the sound laws discussed in the previous chapter, each sound following the development of the English sound which most nearly corresponded to it; e.g. O.N. tāgr > M.E. lōwe, O.N. felagi > M.E. felawe, O.N. reisa > M.E. reisen, raisen.

THE OLD-FRENCH ELEMENT IN MIDDLE-ENGLISH

§ 90. The same thing happened in the case of Old-French words; but here the student must be careful to note the time of the borrowing and the dialect of Old-French from which the word was taken. Most of the words that came into early M.E. from French sources have Anglo-Norman forms. The same words often came in later with Continental forms, giving rise to doublets; e.g. conveien, convoien; Norm. Fr., conveyer; Cont. Fr., convoyer. While such words generally fell together with the M.E. forms which most nearly corresponded (e.g. O.Fr. rōse > M.E. rōse), several special points are worthy of notice:—

- (1) O.Fr. ou from Mediæval Latin ō > M.E. ū (= ou); e.g. O.Fr. flour (flōrem) > M.E. flour (= flūr); O.Fr. honour > M.E. honour (= honūr).
- (2) In many O.Fr. verbs the stem varied according to differing conditions of accent in Latin. To English ears this seemed to be a difference of verb-stem; so we have in M.E. double forms; e.g. proven and preven, removen and remeven, etc.
- (3) The diphthongs ai, ei, fell together in Anglo-Norman just as in M.E.; so that we have written forms faith, feith, to represent M.E. faith.

- (4) Before s and a consonant, a palatal consonant and liquid, or s, t, d, v, not followed by a consonant, these diphthongs underwent a further development into  $\bar{e}$ , so that we get double forms in M.E.; e.g. eise,  $\bar{e}se$ ; saisoun,  $s\bar{e}soun$ .
- (5) The French  $\bar{u}$  retained its French sound in early M.E. In late M.E. it is written ew when final or before a vowel, giving such forms as virtew, crewel. These appear in Chaucer Mss.
- (6) At first, O.Fr. borrowings had the Fr. syllable stress, e.g. honour; later, they took English stress, e.g. hónour. This gave rise to double forms in Chaucer, differing in respect to accent. See Part IV.

PART II.—INFLECTION

§ 91. According to the principle stated in § 78 (a), a M.E. inflectional syllable can only contain the vowel e,<sup>1</sup> with the corresponding consonant, if there was one, except in the case of m, which is weakened to n (§ 82), and of n, which is lost or retained at the will of the poet. This influence in M.E. Inflection was supplemented by another, viz. that of analogy, through which inflectional forms of commoner occurrence either became standard for all forms or modified those adopted as standard; as, for instance, in the case of nouns, the nominative case singular and plural; in verbs, the stem of the third person singular.

THE INFLECTION OF NOUNS AND ADJECTIVES

§ 92. Most nouns which in O.E. ended in a consonant went over into the ǣ-declension in M.E. The nominative form was generalized for all cases in the singular and plural except the genitive, which retained the O.E. -es of the singular for both numbers.

§ 93. The Nominative Singular ends in -e where the O.E. nominative ended in a vowel ;<sup>1</sup> e.g.

From the jǎ-declension ; e.g. ende (ende) 1865.

ō-declension ; e.g. care (cearu, Merc. caru) 1321.

i-declension ; e.g. spere (spere) 114.

u-declension ; e.g. tale (talū) 36 ; sone (sunu) 79.

n-declension ; e.g. nonne (nunne) 163 ; nekke

(hnecca) 238 ; steede (stēda) 2727 ; tȳme (tīma)

44 ; bowe (boga) 108 ; ȳe (ēage) 10.

Likewise where the O.Fr. nominative ended in -e ; e.g.

Ioye 1871, diete 435, chauntrye 510, visage 627,

Rome (: to me) 671.

§ 94. Loss of Final *-e. — This final -e is usually dropped in words of more than two syllables (cf. § 78, c). In dissyllables, too, it sometimes does not count as a syllable in the verse ; e.g. nōse (O.E. nosu) 2167, 123 ; dore (O.E. doru) 2422 (cf. dore 550) ; tyme (O.E. tīma) 2474, 102 ; mete (O.E. mete) 136 ; and perhaps hope (O.E. hopa) in 88, though the verse-pause comes after hope in a, see § 259 (a).

§ 95. Unhistoric Final *-e. — As the ō-declension was the one which contained most of the feminine nouns of O.E. and its final -ū > M.E. -e, and as most of the other feminine nouns were in the weak declension ending in -e which remained in M.E., it was natural that final -e should be considered the typical ending for a feminine noun. Most M.E. feminines, therefore, take -e in the nominative singular, even when there was no final vowel in O.E., O.N., or O.Fr. ; e.g. roote (O.N. rōt) 423 ; boone : soone (O.N.

<sup>1</sup> The Ellesmere and Hengwrt (α) Mss. are almost always accurate in writing the final vowel in all forms of inflection. Other Mss., written when the -e was becoming silent, or by scribes in whose dialect it was already silent, are not at all trustworthy.

bōn) 2269; youthē (O.E. geogub, later iugub) 461; queene (O.E. cwēn) 1685, 923; reste (O.E. rest) 1003; wounde (O.E. wund) 1010; soule (O.E. sāwol) 2786, heuene (l.O.E. heofone, fem.) 519, etc.<sup>1</sup>

§ 96. Proper names sometimes have their classic form, sometimes an Anglicized or O.Fr. form; e.g. Saturnus 2443, Saturne 2453; Theseus 2523, Thesëus 1883.

§ 97. Genitive Singular. — The regular genitive ending is -es; in words of more than two syllables, -es. There are a few cases where the M.E. noun preserves the historical development of some O.E. declension other than the ǎ-declension.

(a) The -an of the weak declension; e.g. his lady (O.E. hlæfdigan) grace 88; cf. 695; at the sonne vpriste 1051.

(b) A form without any ending in words denoting relationship; e.g. my fader soule 781, a kynges brother sone 3084; but usually, fadres, broperes.

(c) Proper nouns ending in -s appear without the genitive ending;<sup>2</sup> e.g. to Venus temple 2272, Epicurus owne sone 336.

(d) A few Romance words do not take the genitive ending; e.g. your heritage right, Compleynte vnto Pite 71 (Gl. Ch., p. 327), the rose<sup>3</sup> colour 1038.

<sup>1</sup> But a few O.E. masculines take this -e, on what grounds has not yet been explained; e.g. weye (already in the Ormulum with -e) 791, but wey 34. The Acc. feere (: geere, theere) in B 803 may be due to analogy from the dative form in phrases like for feere 2344, 2686. Similarly, in the case of weye. Folde (: witholde) 512 (O.E. fald, given as neuter by Sievers, as masculine by Sweet) may be due to confusion with folde (O.E. folde), meaning 'enclosed ground.' Two neuters, gate (O.E. geat) 1415 and dale (O.E. dæl) also take this unhistoric -e.

§ 98. Dative Singular. — Though in most cases the dative singular is like the nominative singular, there are a few forms in Chaucer that go back to the O.E. dative ending in -e; e.g. of towne 566, for feere 2344, 2686, yeer by yere 1203, in honde 2347, of wighte 2145, 2520, on lyue 3039.

§ 99. The Plural. — The usual ending for the nom. plu. is -es (from O.E. -as), which generally became -s (-es) in words of two or more syllables, especially after a liquid or nasal and after a vowel (cf. § 78, (c)); e.g. battailles 61, auntures 795, deyntees 346, palmeres 13, ladyes 999 (cf. ladys 2579), obsequies 993, rubyes 2147, daungers 402, housbondes 460, louedayes 258.

§ 100. The plural is found without inflectional ending in a number of neuter nouns whose nom. plu. in O.E. had no inflectional ending; e.g. twenty yeer of age 601, his hors were goode 74, twenty pound 2520, sheep, neet 597, swyn, hors 598. Likewise wepne (O.E. wæpnu) in 1591 seems to be plural; cf. B 3214. Also, in the case of freend 3050, 3051, which had the O.E. pl. frēond, there is no inflectional ending. So, frequently in the case of night (O.E. pl. niht), thing (O.E. pl. þing), winter, mile, and by analogy in a few Romance words denoting measure; cf. an hondred part D 2062.

§ 101. If the nom. sing. ends in s no change is made for plural; cf. caas 323, 2971, paas 1890, 2901; similarly vers.

§ 102. Monosyllabic words ending in a vowel sometimes form the plural by adding -s (-es); e.g. fees 317, 1803, shoes 457; but not always; e.g. knees 1103, trees 607.

§ 103. There are a few instances in Chaucer where monosyllabic words ending in a consonant other than s seem to have plurals in -s (-es) just as in N.E.;<sup>1</sup> e.g. (from the Pr.

& Kn. T.) poynzt and caas 2971, the goddes aboute 2479, and clothes for thy beddyng 1616.

§ 104. The O.E. nouns which form their plural by umlaut have corresponding forms in Chaucer; e.g. men (: hen) D 1111 (but lemmans D 1998). So fēt, gēs, tēth, kȳn (with -n inflection added).

§ 105. Many nouns of the O.E. -n declension retain the old plural form. Chaucer uses -es forms side by side with -en forms; e.g. asshen 1364 (also ashes), ȳen, eyen 152 (also ȳes), been (also bees), fōn (also fōs), tōn (also tōes), shōn (also shōes).

§ 106. From analogy with these, -en is added to the plural chȳlder (O.E. cildru); similarly, doughtren, brēthern, sustren; cp. kȳn (O.E. plural, cȳ).

ADJECTIVES

§ 107. In the inflection of adjectives, as in the inflection of nouns, O.E. nominatives or O.Fr. nominatives ending in -e retain the -e in M.E. Of the O.E. forms with -e, the following occur most frequently: soote 1, swēte (O.E. swēte) 5, grēne (O.E. grēne) 103, clēne (O.E. clāene) 504, rīche (O.E. rīce) 864, trēwe (O.E. trīewe) 531, 959, scheene (O.E. scēone) 972, dēre (O.E. dīere) 1822; likewise, thinne, blithe, keene, derne, sōfte (O.E. sēfte), drie (O.E. drȳge).<sup>1</sup> So with

Princes, 19, b. There are several others in Zupitza-Schleich's edition of Lydgate's Fabula Duorum Mercatorum. Many are to be found, too, in the M.E. Romaunt of the Rose.

<sup>1</sup> Besides these there are a few strong adjectives which have an unhistorical -e in M.E. that is probably due to the influence of weak forms, but has not yet been clearly explained, — bare (but read bare) 2877, tame 2186. Ten Brink wrongly cites fayre (see § 115, d), lyte (see § 83, b), euene (see § 112), lowe (in 522 lough; but lowe does occur in Chaucer). Skeat adds longe; but see § 112. For alle see § 144.

O.Fr. adjectives: straunge (O.Fr. estrange, cf. § 6) 464, solempne (O.Fr. solemne) 209, nyce (O.Fr. nice) 398, queynte (: queynte, 3d sing. pret.) (O.Fr. cointe) 2333.

§ 108. This -e is usually dropped in words of more than two syllables; cf. § 78 (c).

§ 109. -wo stem adjectives with nominative in -u have -we in Chaucer; e.g. yelwe (O.E. geolu) 1929, falwe (O.E. fealu) 1364.

§ 110. The -e, though often written, is generally silent in adjectives of more than one syllable in the nominative; e.g. a thredbare cope 260, the shorteste 836; but certeyne dayes 2996.

§ 111. The Strong and Weak Declension of adjectives is still kept up in M.E. The strong (indefinite) form is uninflected in the singular, and has -e in the plural; the weak (definite) form has -e in both singular and plural.<sup>1</sup>

Strong: Sing. yong, swete.

Plu. yonge, swete.

Weak: Sing. the yong-e (sonne), swete.

Plu. the yong-e, swete.

§ 112. In the singular of the strong form, some relics of earlier datives (O.E. -um) occur in phrases; e.g. of euene lengthe 83.

§ 113. An O.E. strong genitive plural survives in aller (O.E. ealra); e.g. hir aller cappe 586 (cf. also 799, 823). It sometimes has the form alder, alther, cf. § 88 (c); e.g. alderbest 710.

§ 114. When the plural form of the strong declension is used in the predicate, it is sometimes inflected, sometimes not; e.g. his hors were goode 74, fetheres lowe 107, wayke

§ 115. The weak form of the adjective is used as follows:—

- (a) When it is preceded by the definite article, a possessive or a demonstrative pronoun;<sup>1</sup> e.g. the longe day 354, atte (= at the) leeste waye 1121, his halfe cours 8, this goode man 850.
- (b) After a noun in the genitive; e.g. Epicurus owene sone 336.
- (c) Before a noun in the vocative case: e.g. faire fresshe May 1511, leeue brother 1184.
- (d) Before a proper name;<sup>2</sup> e.g. by Seynte Loy (Mss. seynt) 120, vnto Seinte Poules 509, goode Arcite 2855, faire Venus 2663, of faire, yonge, fresshe Venus 2386; cf. 2369, 2032, 431; so, perhaps, Veyne-Glorie 2240.
- (e) When it is used substantively; e.g. the beste 387, by weste 388.

§ 116. In Chaucer, as in M.E. generally, a few instances of plural adjectives with O.Fr. inflection are found, but none in the Prol. and Knichtes Tale; e.g. places delitables (: tables) F 899, houres inequales Astro. 186 (Gl. Ch., p. 647), souereynes, deuynes substaunces, 'supreme spiritual substances,' Boece 1658 (Gl. Ch., p. 424).

For Pronominal Adjectives see Pronouns.

NUMERAL ADJECTIVES

§ 117. Cardinal. — The numeral one (O.E. ān) has two forms, ȝ, ȝn, and a, an (due to lack of sentence-stress)<sup>1</sup>; make a nombre, 'make one number,' i.e. 'add together' Astro. 263 (Gl. Ch., p. 651), noght o word 304, oon of hem 148, a point of alle my sorwes smerte 2766.

The cardinal numbers 1–9 are usually inflected with -e; e.g. tweye, tweyne (O.E. masc. twegen), twȝ (O.E. fem. and neut. twā), thrē, foure (O.E. fēower) 210, fyue (fyue in B 3602), sixe, seuene (O.E. seofon), eighte, nyne (O.E. nigon, but North. nione). So twelue 527, threttene, etc.; but twelf-monthe 651.

§ 118. The Ordinals are firste or forme (an old superlative), other or secounde, thridde, ferthe, etc., ending in -the, except sixte, eighte, twelfte.

Numeral adverbs for 1, 2, 3, end in -es (cf. § 122); ones, twyes, thryes. But cardinals are sometimes used instead; e.g. two so ryche Leg. 2291 (Gl. Ch., p. 621), Thogh ye had lost the ferse (Mss. ferses) twelue, 'Though you had lost the queen a dozen times' Duch. 723.

ADVERBS

§ 119. The regular adverb ending in M.E., as in O.E., is -e<sup>2</sup>; cp. and faire ryde 94, with a fair forheed 154. So soore 230, smerte 149, inne 41, moore 825, etc. In adverbs of more than two syllables, the -e is usually -e; e.g. sometyme 3024.

§ 120. Adverbs which had no -e in O.E. often had the -e added in M.E.; e.g. heere 1585; but usually the -e in these words is not sounded within the verse in Chaucer, though written; e.g. Thanne 12; so usually here, but heere (: decre wk.) 1819, there, whanne; ofte is usually dissyllabic.

§ 121. When this adverbial ending was added to the adjective-suffix -lic (as in M.E. adjectives like estatlich 140, freendlich 2680), making -lice, double forms arose according as the final c was lost or not (§ 79 (c)); cf. roialliche ybore 378, and roially 1713; rudeliche 734.

§ 122. Case-endings are sometimes used to form adverbs, especially the -es of the genitive singular; e.g. thries 63, nedes 2324, his thankes ('for his part,' 'willingly') 1626, hir thankes ('for their part,' 'willingly') 2114. So ayeines, amonges, besides, etc. Also the accusative; e.g. haluen dēl (O.E. healfne dāel); and prepositional phrases, among (O.E. on-gemange), aliue (O.E. on-life), to-morwe (O.E. tō-morgen), anōn (O.E. an-ān).

Wonder is sometimes an adverb; e.g. wonder diligent 483 (cf. O.E. wundrum fægr).

THE COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES AND ADVERBS

§ 123. The comparison of adjectives in M.E. is practically the same as in N.E., except that the -er, -est forms are not limited to monosyllabic adjectives. A final consonant of the positive was doubled in the comparative and superlative in O.E. In M.E. an originally long vowel was thus shortened (cf. § 55); e.g. grēt, grētter.

§ 124. lenger, strenger, elder, from long, strong, ōld, still retain the unlauded vowel of the O.E. forms.

§ 125. Of the irregularly compared adjectives, good has comparative forms, better, bettre, bet; bad has badder, werse

(: reherse), worse (: curs) ; muchel has comp. mōre (O.E. māra), mō<sup>1</sup> (O.E. mā), and superlative mōst (Angl. māst), mēst (W.S. māest) ; lyte has lāsse, lēsse (O.E. lāssa — cf. § 55), neigh, ny, has comp. nerre, ner, superlative next ; fer has comp. ferre ; dēre has comp. derre.

§ 126. The comparative is not inflected ; e.g. the gretter ende 197 ; but the superlative is, though the -e is generally -e ; e.g. his ouereste courtepy 290 ; but not always, e.g. he was the semelieste man H 119 (Gl. Ch., p. 261).

§ 127. Adverbs are usually compared as in N.E., but a few forms are found in which -ly is added to the comparative of the adjective to make that of the adverb ; e.g. murierly 714. In ferrer 835 we have -er added to a form already comparative.

PRONOUNS

§ 128. The Personal Pronoun of the First Person has two forms for the nom. sing., I (: enemy) 1644, and ich, ic (cf. § 79, c), as in theech (= the ich : beech G 928), and in the phrase ich hadde. The northern ic is also used in the Miller's Tale to represent the dialect of the Northern students. Its other forms correspond to those of N.E.

§ 129. In the Second Person the nom. sing. pou (pū) frequently takes an enclitic form, — ow after an auxiliary verb ; e.g. woltow (woltū) for wolt thou 1544. The dative and accusative singular is thee. The plural nominative is ye (O.E. gē), dative and accusative yow (O.E. ēow) ; cf. I pray yow (dat.) . . . that ye (nom.) narette, etc., 726–7.

<sup>1</sup> mō (originally a substantively used neuter form mā, and the adverb mā) is usually the adverb form or the adjective used substantively. bet (originally adverbial), too, is generally an adverb in M.E., but not always.

§ 130. In the Third Person the forms are as follows:—

SINGULAR			PLURAL
Masc. Neut.	Fem.
hē	hit	shē	they
his	hir(e), hēr(e)		hir(e) 365, 368, hēr(e)
him	hir(e), hēr(e)		hem
him	hit	hir(e), hēr(e)	hem

§ 131. For the feminine singular, hēr(e) (and not hir(e), as stated by Ten Brink) was probably Chaucer's form; e.g. hēre (: bēre) 1421, 2057, (: wēre) E 887; the -e, however, is generally silent within the verse, though usually written by good scribes.

§ 132. The Possessive Adjectives are for the first and second persons my, thy, with forms in -n, which are usual before vowels; for the third person, masc. and neut., his(e), fem. hir(e), hēr(e), plu. our(e), your(e), hir(e), hēr(e). The -e is usually written, especially after r, in good Mss., but, as a rule, is not sounded; e.g. oure feith 62, but cf. B 4118, 4150. myne is inflected as a plural adjective in 2467.

DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

§ 133. The Definite Article the is frequently joined to a following substantive which begins with a vowel, as in Thes-taat, tharray, for The estaat, the array 716. But this is not always indicated in the writing; e.g. the ordres 210.

§ 134. In O.E., the neuter of the article (which was declined for gender, number, and case) was þæt; this survives in the expressions that oon, that other (the toon, the tothir,<sup>1</sup> in Boece 673), 'the one,' 'the other.' The phrase that other is even used with the plural, that othere cerklis, 'the other circles,' Boece 1476 (Gl. Ch., p. 416); that othere is plural, too, in Boece 1796. þæt survives, also, as a definite article in That wheither, 'The one of you two who' 1856, 1857.

§ 135. A trace of oblique case-inflection is preserved in the phrase for the nonys (O.E. for ðǣm ānes) 523, etc., and in atte nale (O.E. æt þām ealoð); (cf. § 82, (a)). The instrumental case of the article (O.E. þy) is preserved in M.E. and N.E. as the; e.g. the moore mury 802.

§ 136. That, however, is usually a demonstrative pronoun with a plural, thȳ (O.E. þā), which must not be confused with the adverb thȳ 'then'; e.g. tho wordes 498, 1123.

§ 137. The demonstrative pronoun this has the plural form thēs, thēse (O.E. fem. sing. nom. þeos), and a new form thise, which is generally thise; but the inflected thise is found frequently;<sup>1</sup> e.g. thise bookes olde 2294, thise steedes 2892.

RELATIVE AND INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

§ 138. Relative and Interrogative Pronouns are nearly the same in Chaucer as in N.E.

§ 139. Which is masc. and fem. as well as neut. in M.E. (it is used to refer to the Marchaunt in 568), and is inflected when used like an adjective, — whiche, whiche; e.g. inflected for number, our lordes whiche that ben slawe 943, of whiche two 1013; inflected as definite adjective, the whiche day 2998; inflected because used substantively, The whiche me list 2074.

§ 140. Whiche is also used as an interrogative pronoun

(cf. Lat. qualis), meaning what sort of (persons or things); e.g. And whiche they were 40, whiche that they were 2948.

§ 141. What is sometimes an indefinite pronoun; e.g. a litel what smylynge, 'smiling a little,' Boece 1445 (Gl. Ch., p. 415).

Very frequently what corresponds to N.E. why; e.g. What sholde he studie? 'Why should he study?' 184.

OTHER PRONOMINAL WORDS, CHIEFLY INDEFINITE

§ 142. The personal pronouns he, she, it, are sometimes used as indefinite pronouns in M.E. (cf. § 200).

§ 143. al in its pronominal use is usually inflected; e.g. alle the ordres 210, (?) alle the hauenes 407, alle the armes 2411: but the -e is generally lost; e.g. alle the feeldes 977, alle the rytes 2370, alle the circumstaunces 1932. Cp. al this lamentacioun 935. Otherwise al is treated like an adjective; e.g. alle we 934, of hem alle 912.

§ 144. Besides its regular pronominal use, the adjective al is often used in M.E. in a distributive sense with abstract nouns, meaning every form of, every kind of. In such cases, the plural form is found, as in O.E.;<sup>1</sup> e.g. alle grace 1245, alle charitee 1623, alle ioye and blis 1684, alle blisse 3097, alle wele 3101, alle rancour 2732; cf. such expressions as in alle wise B 1251, in alle maner thynges 2181, where alle has this distributive sense.

§ 145. bōthe (O.N. bāðir) is inflected like an adjective,

§ 146. eyther (O.E. ægþer) has a genitive eytheres. Compounded with ne it appears as neither. A pronominal nōther (= ne + ōther, O.E. āþer) also occurs in M.E.; e.g. neyther nother habite, 'neither the one attitude nor the other,' Bo. 1742 (Gl. Ch., p. 428).

§ 147. ēuery, ēuerich (O.E. āfre ālc; for the difference in M.E. forms cf. § 79, c), are both found in Chaucer; cf. 3 and 241. euerich is often joined with qn to make a compound pronoun; e.g. ēuerychon 31.

§ 148. the ilke, thilke, this ilke, that ilke (O.E. se ilca), 'the same,' 'the very,' 'that very,' naturally have the weak adjective ending; cf. § 115 (e).

§ 149. men, me, is the historic development of O.E. man, 'one,' with the a weakened to e on account of its lack of stress; cp. what asketh men 2777. It was evidently confused by scribes with the plural of man, 'man,' which was also used indefinitely in M.E.; cf. as men fynde (: Inde) 2155.

§ 150. self (O.E. self, selfa) occurs in both the strong and weak forms; e.g. myself 544, hym selue 528, hymself 184. As an adjective, selue is the common form; e.g. that selue moment 2584, the selue king, Bo. 313 (Gl. Ch., p. 366).

§ 151. som, somme, is used both for singular and plural; cf. som wol ben armed on his legges weel 2123, and somme seyden thus 2516. Some (plu.) rhymes with come in 2187; but it is usually some within the verse.

§ 152. swich, such (O.E. swylc, cf. § 83, a, 81, b), is declined like an adjective ; e.g. swich cas 2822, swiche com-paignyes 2589, swiche glarynge eyen 684.

VERBS

In Old English, as in Middle English and New English, there were two great classes of verbs, strong and weak. The strong verbs had four tense-stems, viz. present, preterit singular, preterit plural, and past participle, containing different vowels ; the weak verbs had the same stem for all tenses. In the course of the development of the language from the Old English period to the present, a tendency has been manifest to transfer strong verbs to the weak class. In Middle English, therefore, a number of verbs which in Old English were in the strong class have gone over to the weak conjugation.

THE STEM-FORMS OF STRONG VERBS

§ 153. The O.E. strong verbs appear as a rule in M.E. forms developed from the corresponding O.E. forms according to the principles laid down in Part I. The two stems for the preterit, which in O.E. had different vowels for the singular and plural, are in M.E. for the most part levelled under one, generally that of the singular ; where a separate stem for the preterit plural occurs, it is usually that of the past participle. By Chaucer's time, therefore, many of the strong verbs have only three stems, present, preterit, and past participle. The Classes are as follows :—

In giving the principal parts of verbs the infinitive, for the sake of uniformity, is here put down as normally ending in -e, except where the verb stem ends in a vowel, and the preterit plural as ending in -en ; the participle is given without the prefixed y ; cf. §§ 182, 184.

CLASS I

§ 154. CHARACTERISTIC. — ī followed by a single consonant.

Vowel Series :

arīse 'arise'	arq̄s	arīsen (§ 5)		arīsen

So with agrīse 'shudder,' bīde, bīte, glīde, shīne, shrīue, smīte, thrīue, wrīe<sup>1</sup> 'cover'; rīue (O.N. rīfa) and strīue (O.Fr. estrīuer) are in this class from analogy with thrīue, drīue, etc.

CLASS II

§ 155. CHARACTERISTIC. — ē (ī, ou) followed by a single consonant.

Vowel Series :

PRES.	PRET.	PAST PART.
ē (< O.E. ēo )
ī (< O.E. ēo + g )	ē (< O.E. sing. ēa ; O.E. plur. had ū )	q̄ (< O.E. ō , cf. § 52)

<sup>1</sup> From O.E. wrīgan, originally of Class I, with parts wrīgan, **wrīhan* (contracted to wrēon), wrāh, wrīgon, wrīgen; but ēo gave it principal parts in O.E. according to Class II: — wrēon, wrēah, wrūgon, wrūgen. In M.E. we have developments from both sets of forms: infinitives wrīen I, and wrēen II, preterit wreigh II, past participle wrīen I.

bēde <sup>1</sup> 'command'	bēd	bōden (cf. mys- boden 909)
chēse <sup>2</sup> 'choose'	chēs	chōsen
crēpe 'creep'	crēp A 4226 (wk. crepte D 1698)	crōpen
clēue 'split'	(wk. clefte , Bl. 72)	clōuen 2934
sēthe 'boil'	sēth	sōden

So flēte 'flow,' shēte 'shoot,' brēwe 'brew' (pret. brēw).

Where O.E. ēo was followed by g the result in M.E. was ī, § 69 (d), giving in this class some infinitives in ī; e.g.

flȳen <sup>3</sup> } flēn }	{ fleigh (O.E. flēah ) B 3879 flȳ (cf. § 72 (c)) B 4362 flaugh <sup>4</sup> B 4421	} flōwen flōwen B 4581

lȳen 'lie' (<O.E. lēogan) leigh Tr. II, 1077
 (wk. lȳed 659) (wk. lȳed)

<sup>3</sup> O.E. flēogan 'to fly,' which gave M.E. flȳen, and flēon 'to flee,' which gave M.E. flēen, were originally two distinct verbs, but were confused in late O.E. and confounded in M.E. and N.E. both in form and meaning. flēn has also a weak pret. flēdden in 2930.

This class in O.E. contained also some infinitives in  $\bar{u}$ . Of these there remain in common use in M.E.

bowe 'bow' (O.E. būgan) (beigh) (bōwen)
 wk. bowed wk. bowed

Brouke 'brook' is used only in the present.

§ 156. Classes III, IV, V, all originally contained verbs whose characteristic was  $\check{e}$ , and in O.E. they had the same vowel-sequence in present and preterit singular, viz. pres.  $\check{e}$  (or some development from it) and pret. sing.  $\check{a}$  (or some development from it), differing from one another in the preterit plural and past participle: III having pret. plur.  $\check{u}$  (or some development from it) and p.p.  $\check{o}$  ( $\check{u} + \text{nas.}$ ); IV having pret. plur.  $\bar{a}$  and p.p.  $\check{o}$  ( $\check{u} + \text{nas.}$ ); V having pret. plur.  $\bar{a}$  and p.p.  $\check{e}$ . M.E. usually preserves the regular development of these forms.

CLASS III

§ 157. CHARACTERISTIC. —  $\check{e} + \text{liquid and consonant}$ ;  $\check{i} + \text{nasal and consonant}$ .

Vowel Series:

PRES.	PRET. SING.	PRET. PL.	P. PART.

Note that all these vowels are subject to the group-lengthenings of §§ 46-51; so that we have present stems like yēlde, fīnde, clīmbe; preterit singular stems like clōmb, yōld; preterit plural and past participle stems like founden, wounden (ou = ū).

It will be well, therefore, to divide Class III into two subclasses: —

- (a) Verbs with stem-vowel followed by l or r and a cons.
 (b) Verbs with stem-vowel followed by m or n and a cons.

§ 158. III a.

hēlpe	‘help’	{ hǎlp heelp <sup>1</sup> 1651 }	hōlpen	hōlpen 18
swēlle	‘swell’	swāl		swōllen
yēlde	‘yield’	yōld	yōlden	yōlden
	(§ 47)
dēlue	‘delve’	dālf Bo. 1637	by-doluen Bo. 1637
		dulue <sup>2</sup> pret. subj. Bo. 1639
stēruē	‘die’	stārf 933	stōruen C 888	stōruen
kēruē	‘carve’	cārf 100	cōruen	cōruen
brēste <sup>3</sup>	‘burst’	brāst	brōsten	brōsten
thrēsshe	‘thrash’ 536
worthe	‘become’ ( o = u (§ 6) < w + eo (§ 64))	wārth

So also fighten (l.O.E. fihtan), pt. sg. faught 399 (< O.E. feaht, cf. § 73 a), pt. pl. foughten, p.p. foughten (< O.E. fōhten, cf. § 73 c).

§ 159. III b.

winne	wǎn	wonnen (o = u)	wonnen (o = u)
spinne	span	sponnen	sponnen
beginne	began	begonnen	begonnen
swimme	swam	swommen	swommen
rēnne <sup>1</sup> 1761	rǎn 509	ronnen (o = u)	ronnen (o = u) 8
singe	soong 122	songen (o = u)	songen (o = u)
	(§ 50)
springe	sprong	sprongen (o = u)	sprongen (o = u)

So stinge, swinge, ringe.

fīnde (§ 48)	foond	founden (ou = ū)	fōunden (ou = ū)
bīnde	bond	bounden (ou = ū)	bōunden (ou = ū)

So grīnde, wīnde, clīmbe.

drinke	drānk	dronken (o = u)	dronken (o = u)
	(§ 61)	820	1261
sinke	sǎnk	sonken (o = u)	sonken (o = u)

So swinke 'toil,' shrinke, stinke.

Moorne (§ 50) 'mourn,' sporne 'spurn,' and brenne 'burn,' originally of this class, became weak in M.E.

CLASS IV

§ 160. Most of the verbs in this class having in O.E. short ǣ before a single consonant, the corresponding M.E. vowel will have been lengthened to ē; see § 52.

<sup>1</sup> The M.E. form of this present stem is due to O.N. renna.

Characteristic :  $\bar{e}$  before a single liquid.

Vowel Sequence :

PRES.	PRET. SING.	PRET. PL.	P. PART.
$\bar{e}$	$\bar{a}$ (< O.E. $\bar{a}$ )	$\bar{e}$ (< O.E. $\bar{a}$ ) <sup>1</sup>	$\bar{o}$ (< O.E. $\bar{o}$ )
stēle 'steal'	stāl		stōlen 2627
$\bar{e}$ 'ere' 'bear'	baar 237	bāren 721	bōre 1542
	beer (: heer Leg. B. 216)		bōrn
	bār 105 <sup>2</sup>

So shēre 'shear,' tēre 'tear'; wēre 'wear,' originally weak, has a strong preterit plural wēre (: spēre 2948) and also a weak preterit wēred 75; hēle 'conceal' has a weak past participle hēled B 4245. Brēke (brāk 1468, brōken) and spēke (spāk, spōken) belong to this class, though their characteristic would put them in Class V.

Two of the verbs of this class are irregular, viz., —

come ( o=u ) 'come'	cōm : dōm G. 242	come ( o=u ) 23
	cām : rām 547 pl. cōmen
nīme 'take'	nam nōmen	nomen ( o=u )
	undernōm : -dōm G. 243

<sup>2</sup> The variation is due to confusion between the vowels of the preterit singular and preterit plural stem. The vowel of the plural carried over to the singular gave beer; the vowel of the singular carried over to the plural gave bāren (§ 52); then this long  $\bar{a}$  of the plural was carried back to the singular giving baar (cf. e.N.E. bāre). All these forms are found in M.E. and well illustrate the confusion between preterit singular and preterit plural stems.

CLASS V

Characteristic: ē followed by a single consonant not liquid or nasal.

Vowel Sequence:

PRES.	PRET.	P. PART.
ē (<O.E. ě)	ǣ (<O.E. ǣ)	ĕ (<O.E. ě)
gēte <sup>1</sup> 'get' gāt 704		gēten 291
wrēke 'revenge' wrāk		wrēken wrōken (as Cl. IV)
ēte 'eat' eet (O.E. ǣt <sup>2</sup> )	ēten	ēten
yēue , yūue <sup>3</sup> 'give' yǣf 177	yāuen	yēuen 1086
sēn (O.E. sēon <sup>4</sup> ) 'see'	saugh (§ 72 a, note 3) 1400 saw (§ 71, note 3)	sawen B. 218 yseyn
	in rhyme: seigh (<Angl. sǣh ) 193 say , sey (§ 71, note 3)
( cwēthe )	sȳ (: mercȳ ) G 1381 sȳen Tr. v. 816 (: ȳen ) quoth , quod , 'said he' <sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Due to influence of O.N. gifa; yaf, and not gaf, is due to analogy from the present stem, cf. § 80 (a) and note 1.

<sup>5</sup> The ð for ǣ is explained as being due to the w; the d as taken over from e.M.E. pl. quēden, which preserved a consonant change of th to d.

With ī and double consonant in the present :<sup>1</sup>—

bīdde (§ 155, note 1)	bād		bēden
līen , <sup>2</sup> līggen 2205	lay , 20, 937		leyn
sitte	sāt 271	sēten 2893	sēten
	seet <sup>3</sup> (: feet ) 2075

CLASS VI

§ 162. This class in O.E. had ǣ in the present and past participle before a single consonant, with ō in both numbers of the preterit. The M.E. vowel sequence is therefore —

ā (§ 52)      ō      ā

Characteristic : ā followed by a single consonant.

tāke                      tōk                      tāken

So wāke, cwāke 'quake'; bāke, forsāke, shāke, shāpe<sup>4</sup>; fāre 'fare,' 'go,' has wk. pret. fērde A 1372,<sup>5</sup> and beside the strong fāren a weak fāred in the past participle.

Several verbs of this class having in O.E. ǣ, ē + g, h, develop diphthongs in M.E.; see §§ 70 a, 73 d (pt. sg.), and 70 d (pt. pl.).

drawe (<O.E. drāgan )	drough, drow (<O. E. drōh )	drawen drēw Bl. 862 (influence of knēw )
gnawe (<O.E. gnagan )	gnow (<O.E. gnōh )	gnawen
laughe <sup>1</sup> 'laugh'	lough ( ou = ū )	laughen
slēn <sup>2</sup> 'slay'	slough ( ou = ū )	islawe 943 (<O.E. geslagen )
	slow ( ow = ū )	islaye <sup>3</sup> 63 (<O.E. geslegen )

The following also belong to this class :—

swēre <sup>4</sup> 'swear'	swōr	swōren 810 (<O.E. sworen )
hēue <sup>5</sup> 'heave'	haf (: gaf ) 2428 (cf. Cl. IV) (wk. heued ) hēf Boece 17
steppe 'go'	stōp	stāpen C 4011
wasshe	wessh 2283	wasshen

waxe, wexe, originally of this class, has forms according to Class VII in late O.E.; cf. § 163.

CLASS VII

§ 163. These verbs had originally reduplicated preterit tense-stems. These reduplications were lost in early O.E., but left a class of strong verbs which had preterit stems containing in each case a vowel different from that of the other stems of the verb. Some of them had already assumed weak forms in O.E., others became weak in M.E.; so that in Chaucer's time many verbs of this class had both strong and weak forms. In the case of verbs with O.E. æ in the present stem, the shortening before two consonants when the -de of the preterit and -d of the past participle was added, gave double forms; see § 55, note 1.

Characteristic: the same vowel in the present and past participle; e or ew in the preterit.

lēte <sup>1</sup> 'let'	lēt	lēten
lāte A. 3326,	(wk. lētte )
imper. lāt 840, 831
slēpe 'sleep'	slēp 397	slēpen , wk. slept
wēpe 'weep'	wēp	wōpen (O.E. wōpen )
	wk. wēpte	wēpen , wk. wēpt

So lēpe 'leap' with strong pret. lēp; bēte 'beat' with strong pret. bēt, wk. bētte, strong pp. bēten, and wk. bētt; waxe, wexe, with pl. wēx.

Drēde 'dread' (< O.E. drædan) has a wk. pret. drēdde, drādde, with wk. pp. (y)drād, drēd; likewise rēden 'read' (< O.E. rædan), wk. pret. rēdde, rādde, and wk. pp. rēdd, <sup>1</sup> The fact that both forms, lāt and lēt, occur frequently in the imper. 2d pers. sing. in connection with other verbs (e.g. lat be, etc.) points to a shortening of O.E. læt (cf. § 55, note) due to lack of stress. The infinitive lāte and past participle lāten may be due to the influence of the O.N. verb lāta.

rǎdd; and shēde 'shed' (O.E. scēadan; Orm. shædenn), wk. pret. shǎdde, shēdde, and wk. p.p. shēd, shǎd.

knōwe 'know'	knew (<O.E. cnēow )	knōwen (<O.E. gecnāwen )
(<O.E. cnāwan )

So blōwe 'blow,' grōwe 'grow,' sōwe 'sow,' thrōwe 'throw,' crōwe 'crow.'

hōlde (Merc. haldan )	hēld	hēlden
fälle	fēl (: wel G. 1282)
	fill ( fille : wille 2387)
hongē	hēng	(wk.) honged 2568
hōte <sup>1</sup> 'order,' 'promise,'	hēt (O.E. hēt )	hōten
'be named'	hīht (O.E. hēht , <sup>2</sup> hīht )

WEAK VERBS

§ 164. There are two classes of weak verbs in M.E., viz. —

	PRET.	PAST PART.
Class I,	-ede , -ed , -ēd	-ed , -ēd
Class II,	-de , -dē	-d

<sup>1</sup> As the t of the strong pret. hīght looked like the regular ending of a weak verb, the -e was added giving a preterit, hīghte 719, and a past participle formed, hīght (: knyght) 2472. The fact, too, that hīght looked like a present indicative third singular form contracted from hīghteth, led to its use as a present form; e.g. in Astr. 83 (p. 642) "upon this plate ben compassed certeyn cercles that hīghten almycanteras."

Besides these there was in O.E. a passive form, originally present, but used in late O.E. as preterit, viz. hētte; the two consonants shortened the ē and gave M.E. hätte, hette; from the preterit through analogy with such verbs as mēten, mētte another present, hēten (: lēte) B 334, was formed. All these forms occur in M.E. and are found in Chaucer.

These do not correspond to the O.E. classes, but are due to the operation of the principle stated in § 78 (a). The preterit ending of O.E., Class I a, viz. -ede, thus fell together with that of Class II, viz. -ode, giving one class in M.E. with -eide; this is Class I. The M.E. verb of this class was in every case one of at least three syllables, so that the final -e was usually lost (cf. § 78 (c)) and -ed, -ēd thus became the typical ending for preterit and past participle, e.g. loued, loued (not lovde, louede) though forms in -ede sometimes occur, e.g. weddede 868, lakkede 756, touchede, 2561.

Class II in M.E. is made up chiefly of verbs which added the preterit ending directly to the stem in O.E. (O.E. Classes I b, I c, and III); the typical form of its preterit ending is thus -de; e.g. herde (: answerde) 1123, and that of its past participle ending -d; e.g. herd (: swerd) 1597.

CLASS I

PRET.	PAST PART.
-ede, -ede, -ed, -ēd	-ed, -ēd

Chaucer's rhythm shows that the ending both of the preterit and of the past participle in this class was usually -ēd; e.g. pret. louēd 206, 1197 and often, gameđ 534; p.p. soweđ 685, yclepeđ 376.

The verbs of Class I may be conveniently arranged as follows:—

§ 166. (1) Verbs in -ren (O.E. -rian and short stem syllable, Class I), e.g.:—

wēre 'wear'	wēred 75, 564	wēred
hērie <sup>1</sup> 'honour'	hēried	hēried

<sup>1</sup> This verb and berien retain the -i- of earlier M.E. which was preserved in Southern dialects.

ēre 'plow' 886	ēred	ēred
dēre 'injure' 1822	dēred	dēred
stēre, stire 'stir'	stēred, stired	stēred, stired
(O.E. styrian § 63)

§ 167. (2) Verbs which had in O.E. the pret. -ode, Cl. II; e.g. —

loue	loued	loued
clēpe	clēped	clēped, clēpt (like II)
māke	māked, māde 706	ymāked 2065, maad
	(cf. § 79 (d))	668

Quāke (O.E. cwacian) has strong pret. quook 1576.

§ 168. (3) Nearly all verbs of French origin; e.g. —

passe	passed 448	passed
	paste Tr. II 658	past
rōme	rōmed 1069	rōmed
graunte	graunted 786	graunted 810
conueye	conueyed 2737	conveyed
suffise	suffised	suffised 1233
honoure	honoured	honoured 50
punysshē	punysshed	punysshed 657

§ 169. A number of verbs which should belong to this class have forms according to Class II; e.g. prets. cried and crȳde 2656, preyed and preyde 811, answēred and answērde; p.p. answērd (: cutberd) A 4128 (Gl. Ch., p. 57); died and dīde.

§ 170.

CLASS II

PRET.	PAST PART.
-de, -de	-d

The verbs of this class may be arranged as follows: —

§ 171. (1) Verbs with long stem-vowel in O.E., Cl. I b ; e.g. —

hēre	hērde (§ 55)	hërd
fēde	fēdde	fëd

So fēle, pret. fëlte ; kēpe, këpte ; slēpe (when wk.), slëpte.

lēde 'lead,' lēue 'leave,' sprēde 'spread,' have double forms in preterit and past participle with ë and ǎ in stem (cf. § 55, note).

drēme, sēme have preterit and past participle like Class I, viz. drēmed, sēmed.

§ 172. (2) Verbs in O.E. which had a doubled consonant in stem, Cl. I b ; e.g. —

sette	sette	( y ) sett
--------------	--------------	--------------------------

So whette, knitte.

§ 173. (3) Verbs which in O.E. had umlaut in present but not in preterit stem : —

(a) With doubled consonant in present : —

telle 'tell'	tōlde (O.E. tealde , § 47)	tōld (O.E. geteald )
---------------------	--	------------------------------------

So selle 'sell,' sōlde, quellen 'kill,' pret. not found in Chaucer.

strecche 'stretch'	straughte 2916 (O.E. streǎhte )
	streighte (O.E. strēhte )
abegge <sup>1</sup> (O.E. abycgan )	aboughte 2303 (O.E. abohte )
'atone for'

So by analogy cacche (O.Fr. cachier) 'catch,' caughte.

leye (O.E. lecgan ) 'to lay'	leyde (O.E. legde )	leyd

(b) With long stem syllable in present (for preterit see § 72 (b)) : —

rēche ‘reach’	raughte 2915 (O.E. rēhte > rǎhte )
	reighte (O.E. rēhte > rēhte )
tēche ‘teach’	taughte 497 (O.E. tēhte > tǎhte )
sēke (North. form) ‘seek’	soughte (O.E. sōhte > sōhte )
wirche <sup>1</sup> ‘work’ (O.E. wyrcean )	wroughte (O.E. wōrhte > wrōhte )
bringe	broughte (O.E. brōhte > brōhte )
thenke ‘think’	thoughte (O.E. þōhte > þōhte )
thynke ‘seem’ (impers.)	thoughte ( ou = ū <sup>2</sup> ) (O.E. þūhte > þūhte )

§ 174. (4) Verbs of Class II in O.E. : —

hāue <sup>3</sup> hān (cf. § 84, b)	hādde (usually hādde )	hād
	hāde (cf. § 84 b)
seyen ( siggen Tr. IV, 194) ‘say’	seyde	seyd

§ 175. Consonant Changes in Preterits of Class II : —

As in Class II the -de, -d, of the preterit and past participle ending is brought directly in contact with the stem, changes occur as follows : —

(1) A long vowel is shortened by the consonant group thus made (cf. 55).

(2) d > t as follows : —

(a) after voiceless consonants ; e.g. mēte, mette ; fette, p.p. fet 819.

(b) after a nasal or liquid or a nasal or liquid followed by d or t ; e.g. fēle, fēlte ; mēne, mente ; hente, hente 1300 ; girden, girte 329 ; bülden, bülte 1548.

- (3) Verbs in -ue have prets. in -fte. This change took place in O.E.
- (4) Verbs in th have by assimilation dd in preterit; e.g. kȳthe 'to show,' pret. kīdde; **clēthe* pret. clādde, clēdde.
- (5) Verbs in -ste have a preterit apparently the same as the present; e.g. caste 2854.
- (6) Verbs in -enche have the pret. and p.p. -einte; e.g. blenchen, bleynte 1078, drenchen, dreynt.
- (7) Verbs in -enge have preterit and past participle in -einde; e.g. sprenge, spreynde; sengen, seynde.

INFLECTIONAL ENDINGS OF VERBS

§ 176. The Inflections for Person and Number in the present indicative and present subjunctive are the same for both strong and weak verbs, viz.

Indic. Sing.	1. -e	Subj. Sing.	1. 2. 3. -e
	2. -est
	3. -eth , -th <sup>1</sup>
Plur.	1. 2. 3. -e(n)	Plur.	1. 2. 3. -e(n)

The -e of the first person is sometimes -e; e.g. hauē 2772, telle 1154.

§ 177. In the second and third persons singular of the present indicative the ending is frequently est, eth; e.g. bereth 796; such forms as comth, macth appear in Mss. This is usually the case with verbs with stems ending in a vowel; e.g. seist 1605, ūth 1218, 1795. When the ending is added directly to the stem, contract forms ensue; e.g.

<sup>1</sup> A few Northern indic. 3d sing. endings in -es occur in Chaucer's early work (e.g. Bl. 257, 74; H. of F. 225), and in the Reeves Tale (e.g. 4129 bringes, 3d sing. : thinges, plur.) as part of the local colouring of the tale.

- forget(e)th* > forget 'forgets,' R. of R. 61.
hīght(e)th > hīght 'is called,' Compl. 70 (Gl. Ch., p. 326).
**lygst* > lixt 'liest' D 1761
sett(e)th > set 'sets'
brest(e)th > brest 'bursts' 2610
rīd(e)th > rīt 'rides' 974, 2566.

So bit 'bids' 187, sit 'sits' 1800, histe (subj. : vpriste) 1052, fīnt 'finds,' stont 'stands,' worth 'becomes.'

§ 178. The -e, -en of the third plural is sometimes -e, -en; e.g. comen 687, sayn (: agayn) 1197, blede (? in verse pause) 1801. So in the pret. pl. gonne 1879; and frequently in the case of were, weren 313.

§ 179. The Preterit Indicative inflections of strong verbs differ from those of weak verbs thus:—

	STRONG		WEAK
Sing.	spak	yaf	herde	loued(e)
	spak(e)	yaue	herdest	louedest
	spak	yaf	herde	loued(e)
Plur.	spake(n)	yaue(n)	herde(n)	louede(n)

The second singular is often, through analogy, like the first and third persons.

§ 180. The Preterit Subjunctive in strong verbs is formed on the preterit plural indicative stem, and has -e for singular ending and -en for plural.

§ 181. The Imperative of strong verbs has no inflection in the singular; e.g. help 2312, and has the ending -eth in plural. Weak verbs have -e in the singular and -eth in the plural; the -e of the singular is sometimes -e; e.g. sende me hym 2325, cf. as sende loue and pees 2317.

-eth forms were often used in singular, probably on account of the plural pronoun ye being used for the singular in polite address; cf. 'Cometh neer, quod he, my lady Prioress' 839.

§ 182. The Infinitive ending is -e or -en, the latter being frequently used to prevent elision as in 236 pleyen on. This -e is always written though sometimes -e; e.g. bigynne 853, paye 834, swere 454, telle 831. Stems ending in a vowel usually have -n; e.g. sēn, goon, etc. Some instances of the O.E. gerundive survive in M.E. with an ending -ne; there appears to be one of these in for to sēne (O.E. sēonne) (: grene) 2176, 1036.

§ 183. The Present Participle has the ending -ynge, usually -ynge within the verse and -ynge in rhyme; though perhaps folwyng this in 2367 and shakyng the in 2466; cf. too, 2557.

§ 184. The Past Participle frequently has the prefix y-; cf. § 80 (b). In strong forms the ending is -e, -en, which is frequently -e, -en. In weak verbs the ending is -ed, -d.

PRETERIT PRESENT VERBS

§ 185. These verbs, mostly used as auxiliary verbs in Chaucer's time, are old preterit forms.

1. may. Pres. indic. 1st and 3d may, 2nd mayst 1289, pl. may, mowe (ow = ū) 2999. The subjunctive is usually the same as the indicative, e.g. that we may 1107; but also mowe (O.E. muge). Pret. indic. and subj. myghte 169, mightē. Infin. mowen, Bo. 1786 (Gl. Ch., p. 430).

2. shal. Pres. indic. 1st and 3d shal, 2d shalt, pl. shal 1822, shul 1821, shulle (Ell.) 2356, shullen 3014, shuln. Pret. indic. and subj. sholde 745, shulde (with vowel of present).

3. thar, 'it behooves.' Impers. in 3d sing. pres. thar, Bo. 352 (Gl. Ch., p. 368); pret. thurfte Tr. iii, 572 (Gl. Ch., p. 490).

4. can. Indic. pres. 1st and 3d can, 2d canst, pl. can, conne. Subj. pres. conne, pret. kouthe 390, koude 382, 130. Infin. conne, Tr. v, 1404 (p. 551). Adjectively used p.p. couthe 14.

5. dar. Pres. indic. 1st and 3d dar 1151, 2d darst, pl. dar, dorre, pret. dorste 227.

6. wōt. Pres. indic. 1st and 3d wōt, 2d wōst 2301; pl. wōt 829, 1260, wōte (Hn. 1260), wīten (Ell. 1260); pret. wiste 224. Infin. witen.

7. owe. 1st and 3d owe, 2d owest, pl. owe, owen; pret. oghte (o = ōu) 505.

8. mōt. 1st and 3d mōt 1295, (?) mōste 1290, 2d mōste, pl. mōte 1185, mōte 742. Subj. mōte, pret. mōste 712.

§ 186. Substantive Verb.— Pres. indic. sing. 1st am, 2d art, 3d is; pl. bēn, bē, and occasionally ārn (Merc. and North.), Tr. v, 1374 (p. 551); bēth (South.); pres. subj. bē, bēn; Imper. bē, pl. bēth; pret. indic. 1st and 3d was, 2d wēre; pl. wēre, wēre, wēren, wēren, pret. subj. wēre, wēre; p.p. been.

The substantive verb is very frequently combined with the negative particle ne in nam (ne am), nas (ne was), nēre (ne wēre)

ANOMALOUS VERBS

<sup>1</sup> Wente is the regular preterit of wenden 'turn.' yēde is from O.E. ge-ēode, assigned to O.E. gān as a preterit.

PART III.—SYNTAX

THE Syntax of Chaucer's English is in many respects like that of the English we use to-day. There are some striking differences, however, which it will be well for the student to become familiar with before beginning to read the Middle English. A complete discussion of the subject would require far more space than can be allotted to it in an elementary text-book.

THE SUBJECT

§ 188. The Subject is often left unexpressed in M.E. where it can easily be supplied from the context; e.g. —

I was of her felaweshipe anon

And (we) made forward, etc., 33; cf. 811.

. . . He herde a murmurynge

. . . and (it) seyde thus: 'Victorie' 2433.

With hym ther was a Plowman (who) was his brother 529.

And (the hunter) hereth hym . . . ,

And (the lion) breketh both bowes and the leues,

And (the hunter) thynketh, etc., 1640-43.

So in 150, 478, 600, 829, 909, 1082, 1217, 1327.

This omission is especially frequent with impersonal constructions; e.g. —

(It) Bifil that in that seson on a day, etc., 19.

Now is (it) me shape, etc., 1225.

(Ther) Was nowher such a worthy vauasour 360.

But now is (it) tyme to yow for to telle 720.

(It) Accorded not . . .

To haue with sike lazars acqueyntaunce 245.

So in 230, 244, 462, 849, 1127, 1240.

§ 189. The Subject is often repeated in the form of a pronoun; e.g. —

His officers with swifte feet they renne 2868; cf. 45, 936, 941, 1687.

APPOSITION

§ 190. Nouns in M.E. are often used in apposition with pronouns; e.g. —

Of him, this woful louere, daun Arcite 1379.

Of hym, Arcite 1333; cf. 1210.

The M.E. Appositive construction following proper names, which in N.E. is represented by an attributive construction, appears in —

Of Thebes the citee, ‘Of the city of Thebes’ 939.

CASE

§ 191. The Genitive construction is sometimes used instead of an adjective; e.g. — lyues creature ‘living creature’ 2395.

noyse of peple ‘popular clamor’ 2660, cf. 2534; so noyse of folk G 912, dite of musyk Bo. 1454, fortune of peple Bo. 1421.

§ 192. A Partitive Genitive occurs in — of smale houndes ‘some little dogs’ 146.

§ 193. The Direct object is sometimes proleptically stated in the form of a pronoun representing the object ; e.g. —

*Who kouthe telle or who kouthe it endite,
The Ioye that is maked, etc., 1872.*

§ 194. The Accusative of Measure is used more widely than in N.E. ; e.g. —

*tonne greet 1994.
we riden a litel moore than paas 825.*

§ 195. The Dative is frequent with impersonal verbs ; e.g. — *me thynketh 'it seems to me' 37.

It ran hym in his mynde 'it occurred to him' 1402.
It semed me 'it seemed to me' 39.
Wo was his cook 'There was trouble in store for his cook' 351.*

ADJECTIVE

§ 196. The Adjective is often used substantively to denote a quality ; e.g. —

*Were it of hoot, or cold, or moyste, or drye 420.
of fyn scarlet reed 456.
at thy large 'at liberty' 1283.*

To denote persons : —

But al with riche 'but entirely with rich people' 248.

In apposition with a noun : —

*A frere ther was, a wantowne and a merye, 'There was a friar with us, a rough and jolly fellow' 208.
A monk there was, a fair for the maistrie 'There was a monk with us, a fine fellow in every way' 165 ; cf. 531, 647, 1241.*

§ 197. In the use of compound numeral adjectives the smaller number precedes the larger; e.g. — nyne and twenty 24.

fyue and twenty yeer 'twenty-five years' 82.

PRONOMINAL WORDS

THE ARTICLE

§ 198. The Indefinite Article still retains traces of its use as a numeral adjective (cf. § 117).

§ 199. No Article is used before a noun expressing a general notion; e.g. — greet harm was it 'it was a great pity' 385.

that was scathe 'that was a misfortune'<sup>1</sup> 446.

And shame it is 'and it is a shame' 503.

it was routhe 'it was a pitiful thing' 914.

He was to synful man nat despitous 'He was not supercilious to a sinner' 516.

In comparisons: —

Sharp as point of spere 'as sharp as the point of a spear' 114.

Swift as foul in flight 'swift as a bird in its flight' 190.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS

§ 200. The Personal Pronoun is also an indefinite pronoun in M.E.; e.g. —

Althogh he ('a man') were his brother 737.

he sente hem hoom 'he sent his captives home' 400.

See also 2550, 2606, 3030.

§ 201. The personal pronoun is sometimes used reflexively in M.E.; e.g. —

He rideth hym 1691.

DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUN

§ 202. The Demonstrative this is frequently used in M.E. with a light force; e.g. —

This Palamon 1620.

This Arcite 1636.

§ 203. That is often used to represent a preceding subject, expressed or implied, and its verb; e.g. — and that a worthy man 'and he was an excellent man' 43.

and that a greet 'and he was a great one' (i.e. a great householder) 339.

Withoute bake mete was neuer his hous

Of fish and flessch, and that ('and provisions were') so plenteuous

It snewed in his hous of mete and drynke 343-345.

With the verb repeated: —

He was a Iangler and a goliardeys

And that ('his loose talk') was moost of synne and harlotries 560, 561; similarly in 2166.

RELATIVE PRONOUN

In M.E. the relative clause may be introduced in several ways; viz. —

§ 204. (a) By who or which (cf. § 139) in the proper case, or that (undeclined) as in N.E.; e.g. 501.

§ 205. (b) By who or which followed by that; e.g. — whom that I serue 'whom I serve' 1231.

He which that hath the shorteste shal begynne 836.

What array that they were inne 41.

§ 206. (c) By that followed by the personal pronoun in the proper case; e.g. —

That with a spere was thirled his brest boon 'whose breast was pierced,' etc., 2710.

A knyght there was . . . that, from, etc., . . . he loued chiuallrie 'There was a knight who had loved (for tense, cf. § 222) chivalry,' etc., 43, 44, 45.

§ 207. (d) By as (though this form is not common); e.g. —

May with his hundred as I spak of now 1858.

§ 208. That is frequently a double relative; e.g. —

He kepte that he wan 442.

§ 209. The relative pronoun may be used without an antecedent; e.g. —

Which of yow that bereth him . . .

Shal haue a soper, etc., 796.

§ 210. The relative may have swich for an antecedent; e.g. —

. . . in swich liquor

Of which vertue engendred is the flour 'in a liquor so potent that of its energy the flower is born' 3.

INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

§ 211. Which is frequently used both substantively and adjectively in M.E. in the sense of 'what sort of'; e.g.—

And whiche they were . . . And eek in what array that they were inne 'and what sort of persons they were, and what kind of appearance they made' 40.

For what as interrogative corresponding to N.E. 'why' see § 141.

THE VERB

THE PREDICATE

§ 212. The Predicate is often singular in M.E. though agreeing with two subjects; e.g.—

And after rood the queene and Emelye 2571.

§ 213. The Predicate agrees with the predicate noun rather than with its subject in such phrases as,—

It am nat I 1460.

§ 214. The Predicate is frequently omitted in narrative when it can be easily supplied from the context; e.g.—

A Cristophre (was) on his brest, etc., 115.

Wroght ful clene and weel

Hir girdles and hir pouches (were) euerydeel 367; cf. 362, 472, 473, 2145, 2163.

THE INFINITIVE

§ 215. The pure Infinitive (i.e. infinitive without to) is frequently used in M.E. where the corresponding N.E. idiom requires the preposition; e.g.—

The statue . . . bigan his hauberck ryng 2431.

it is good a man been at his large 'It is good for a man to be at liberty' 2288.

me list . . . pleye 1127.

§ 216. The infinitive idiom to speke of is frequently used in M.E. with a prepositional force; e.g. —

ne was ther noon hym lik

To speke of phisik and of surgerye 'There was no one like him for medicine and surgery' 413; cf. 142, 1829.

§ 217. The Infinitive is often used in M.E. to describe general action related to the rest of the sentence in various ways. A substantively used participle with appropriate preposition has taken the place of this idiom in N.E.; e.g. —

What sholde he . . . make hymseluen wood upon a book . . . 'alwey to poure? 'Why should he drive himself mad by continually poring over a book?' 184.

comfort . . . is ther noon.

To ride by the weye doumb as a stoon 'There is no solace in riding along the road,' etc., 774.

His lord wel koude he plesen subtilly

To yeue and lene hym of his owene good 'He knew how to please his master craftily by making gifts and loans to him out of his own property' 611.

So with nouns: — craft to rekene wel his tydes 'skill in reckoning,' etc., 401.

hope wel to fare 'hope of faring well' 2435.

With adjectives: —

an esy man to yeue (in giving) penaunce 223.

wys to undertake 'prudent in undertaking voyages' 405.

§ 218. The Infinitive, with or without a subject, often follows an impersonal construction and represents the logical subject of the sentence. In N.E. the place of this idiom is in most cases taken by a subordinate clause introduced by that. In some cases, however, the old infinitive idiom remains, but is introduced by for; e.g. —

It is nat likely al thy lif

To stonden in hir grace 'It is not likely that you will be in her favor all your life' 1173.

It is ful fair a man to bere him euene 'It is a fine thing for a man to have self-control' 1523.

No wonder is a lewed man to ruste 'It is no wonder that a layman grows careless' 502.

The Infinitive was frequently employed in O.E. to express obligation, the person on whom the obligation rested being put in the Dative case; e.g. 'hwæt him is tō dōnne, 'what he has to do.' In M.E. this developed into a construction in which the original object became the subject, giving such idioms as: oure conseil was not longe for to seeke, 'he did not have to wait long for our opinion' 784.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD

§ 219. The Subjunctive Mood is frequent in M.E. Some of its uses are the following: —

§ 220. To express a condition: —

But it were any persone obstinate 'But if it was some obstinate person' 521.

if a prest take keep 'if a priest will consider the matter' 503.

But often the indicative is used ; e.g. —

Foyne if hym list 'Let a man thrust if he wants to' 2550.

§ 221. To express any hypothetical notion : —

Ful looth were hym 'he would have disliked' 486.

Out of the court were it a myle or tweye 'It was perhaps a mile or two from the court' 1504.

They seyden that it were a charitee, etc., 'They said that it would be a kindness,' etc., 1433.

as yow liste 'as you may please' 1353.

§ 222. To express concession : —

Though in this world he haue care and wo, 1321 ; cf. 68.

§ 223. With temporal particles : —

Er . . . she me mercy heete 2398.

THE TENSES

§ 224. The Present Tense is used frequently to express a general truth even in a narrative in past time ; e.g. —

A bettre preest I trowe that nowher noon is 524.

His berd was shaue as nygh as euer he can 588.

Euerich for the wisdom that he can

Was shaply for to been an alderman 372.

§ 225. The Preterit Tense is frequently used for the N.E. pluperfect ; e.g. —

he was ('had been') knyght of the shire 356.

And by his couenant gaf ('had given') the rekenyng.

Syn that his lord was twenty yeer of age 601.

She was ('had been') a worthy womman al hir lyue 459.

Housbondes at chirche dore she hadde ('had had') fyue 460.

§ 226. In M.E. the Historical Present and Preterit tenses are often connected in the same narrative ; e.g. —

His baner he desplayeth and forth rood 966.

Dooth to the ladyes whan they from hym wente 999.

Cf. nas . . . taketh . . . spedde 1217 ;

is . . . gan 1782 ;

was born . . . carieth 1633 ;

brak . . . fleeth 1468.

§ 227. The Perfect Tense is formed by the auxiliary verb be in connection with verbs of motion ; e.g. —

Arcite vnto the temple walked is 2368.

ADVERBS

§ 228. The adverbs wel and ful are frequently used like N.E. very, much, quite to give an adjective an added force ; e.g. — ful plesaunt 138, ful fetys 157, ful symple 119, wel good 614, wel bettre 'much better' 256.

§ 229. Ther is often used in M.E. with relative force, and must in such cases be rendered 'where' : —

Ther as he wiste 224.

§ 230. Ther often repeats a place notion already expressed : —

At sessionys ther was he Lord and Sire 255.

In louedayes there could he muchel help 258.

§ 231. As is frequently added to adverbs to show their relative character : —

To take oure wey ther as ('thither') I yow deuyse 34.

There as (where) this lord, etc., 172.

That is likewise added to adverbs introducing adverbial clauses giving combinations like when that 1, 18; er that 36.

§ 232. As is frequently used to introduce a wish or adjuration (cf. N.E. 'so' in 'so help me'); e.g. —

As euere mote I drynke wyn or ale 832.

As sende me, etc., 2325.

As keep me, etc., 2302.

§ 233. The use of the negative adverb in M.E. does not as in N.E. prevent the employment of other negative words; e.g. —

It may nat avaunce

For to deelen with no swich poraille 246.

Compare 70, 251, 889, 2306.

As it were right ('just as if he had been') a whelp 257.

PREPOSITIONS AND CONJUNCTIONS

§ 234. The syntax of prepositions and conjunctions in M.E. is so intimately connected with the development of word meanings that it will be better for the student to get his elementary knowledge of the subject from a good glossary.

PART IV.—VERSIFICATION

STRESS

§ 235. The Rhythm of Chaucer's verse, like that of N.E., depends upon stress.

There are two kinds of stress, viz. that which distinguishes certain syllables of every polysyllabic word from the other syllables of the word, and may therefore be called word-stress; e.g. Caunt- and -bu- (= bü) in the word Caunterbury; and that which distinguishes a particular word from other words of the same group and may therefore be called sentence- (i.e. sense-) stress; e.g. shoures in his shoures.<sup>1</sup>

§ 236. There are at least two grades of stress in English, primary or full stress (denoted by ') and secondary or half stress (denoted by "). Absence of stress is denoted by × ;

e.g. —  $\begin{array}{c} ' \times \times '' \\ \textit{special\ly} \end{array}$   $\begin{array}{c} \times '' \times ' \times \\ \textit{That hem hath holpen} \end{array}$

§ 237. We do not know absolutely what the stress of Chaucer's English was, but we can make trustworthy inferences of its character from the laws governing the development of English (e.g. the one through the operation of which the vowels of inflexional syllables all become e in M.E.), and the following guiding principles are reasonably certain.

<sup>1</sup> Sentence-stress in English is always incident on that syllable of a word which already has word-stress; so that word-stress and sentence-stress never conflict.

WORD-STRESS

NATIVE WORDS

A. Simple Words

§ 238. The primary stress of native simple words falls upon the root-syllable; e.g. heuēnes never heuēnes; louede or louedē never louede.

B. Compound Words

§ 239. Native Noun Compounds have primary stress on the root syllable of the first element; e.g. Caunterbury or Caunterbury, bretherhed, neighebur.

(1) For an apparent exception in Chaucer's verse see § 250.

(2) Some noun compounds follow the analogy of corresponding verbs, see § 241; e.g. answere.

(3) The prefixes i- (= O.E. ge-) and un- are unstressed.

(4) Where romance prefixes are added to native words the root takes the primary stress; e.g. compounds of misdeede, misweyes. Romance suffixes added to native words take primary stress; e.g. dayerye (: pultrye) 597.

§ 240. Adjective and pronoun compounds take the stress of noun compounds.

§ 241. Native Verbal Compounds, including adverbs and prepositions, have primary stress on the second element; e.g. biseken, ouercomen, biknowe 1556.

§ 242. The stress of compound words that are made up of phrase-groups is determined by the sentence-stress of the original phrase; e.g. away (O.E. on wege); compound pronouns ending in -selue(n) thus have the primary stress on the last element; similarly adjective compounds such as short-sholdred 549, as if from short and sholder + ed.

§ 243. A Secondary Stress falls upon any syllable of a polysyllabic word that is separated from another stressed syllable by an intervening unstressed syllable; e.g. absolucioun 222.

§ 244. In compound words whose component elements are distinctly felt a secondary stress falls upon the element which is not primarily stressed; e.g. yeldehalle 370, shirreue 359.

§ 245. The suffixes -dom, -nesse, -esse, -este, -hed, -had, -ynge, -shipe have secondary stress in M.E.

FOREIGN WORDS

§ 246. Foreign words when first brought into English retained their foreign stress.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> As most of the foreign words in the English of Chaucer's time are of Norman French origin it will be well for the student to remember that in French words as a rule the last syllable of the word takes the primary stress if it does not end in -e; otherwise the next to the last has it; e.g. accomplice 2864, purgatorie 1226; desirous 1674, despitous 516, still have their O.Fr. stress.*

* But they are rapidly assimilated to English stress laws. In Chaucer many of these words are in a transition stage and can be stressed in both ways; e.g. felawe 648 and felawe 653 (O.N. felagi); honour 46 and honour 532 (O.Fr. honour); resoun and resoun (O.Fr. resoun); contree 864 and contree 869; plesaunt 138 and plesaunt 222; Arcita 2258 and Arcita 2256.

§ 247. Secondary stress in foreign words follows the principles which govern the secondary stress of native words ;

e.g. compaynye.

§ 248. It is probable, too, that when a foreign word took English stress its originally stressed syllable still retained a secondary stress ; e.g. honour and honour.

SENTENCE-STRESS

§ 249. Sentence-stress was, as far as we know, practically the same as that of N.E. ; e.g. —

The Reue was a splendre colerik man 587.

To take oure wey ther as I yow deuysel 34.

Chaucer makes use of certain licenses in regard to stress : —

§ 250. The stress group ' " (cf. §§ 244, 245) is often treated as " ' in the verse ; e.g. — of his offryng 489.

wynnyng (: thing) 275 ; cf. 119, 326, 905, 901, 446.

manhod 756, forheed 154.

gladneece (: liknesse) 2841.

goddessę Clemence (: presence) 928.

§ 251. Occasionally the verse accent falls on an unimportant word which occurs between two accented syllables, and the word thus gets a secondary stress : —

 . . . a fair for the maistrīe 165.

× ' " " × ' × " ×

THE VERSE

§ 252. The normal verse of the Prologue and Knights Tale is a series of five rising rhythm-waves, each wave being formed by a pair of syllables<sup>2</sup> the second of which receives more stress than the first. The height of the wave depends on the difference in the stress of the pair ; e.g. —

× ' × ' " ' × ' " '
A trewe swynkere · and a good was he

' " × ' × ' " ×'
Lyuyngē in pees · and parfit charitee

' " × ' × ' × " × ' ×
God loued he best · with al his hoole herte

× " × ' × ' × ' × ' ×
At alle tymes · thogh him gamed or smerte

× " × ' × " ' × × ' ×
And thanne his neighe-bour · right as hym selue 531-535.

§ 253. The difference between two successive syllables may be very slight ; e.g. —

× ' " ' × ' " ' × '
A whit cote and a blewē hood wered he<sup>3</sup> 564.

<sup>1</sup> Some of these words, however, had more sentence-stress in Chaucer's time than now; e.g. of (not yet ov or ov), was (not yet waz or woz or wəz).

<sup>3</sup> Here, though the usual stress relationship of adjective and noun is that of secondary to primary, the adjective is more significant than the noun and has heavier stress, the meaning being that the Miller's coat was white and his hood was blue.

§ 254. Chaucer, however, very rarely violates either word-stress or sentence-stress in his poetry, and his natural easy rhythm is one of the characteristics which distinguishes his verse from that of other poets of his day and generation.

THE VERSE PAUSE

§ 255. Each verse is divided into two parts by a distinct pause (cæsura) coincident with a pause in the sense.<sup>1</sup>

§ 256. The usual position for the pause is between the second and third accented syllable in the verse. It may directly follow the second accented syllable (masculine<sup>2</sup> cæsura), or immediately precede the third accented syllable (feminine cæsura); e.g. —

× ' × " × " × ' × '
Whan Zephirus · eek with his swete breeth
 × ' × ' × ' × ' × '
Inspired hath · in euery holt and heeth
 × ' × ' × " × ' × ' ×
The tendre croppes · and the yonge sonne etc. 5.

§ 257. But the pause may stand anywhere between the first accent and the fourth; e.g. —

' × " × ' " ' × ' ×
Gynglen · in a whistlyngē wynd als cleere 170.
 × ' × " × ' × " × ' ×
Or swynken with his handes · and laboure 186.

IRREGULARITIES OF VERSE STRUCTURE

The normal verse of the Prologue and Knichtes Tale, viz. a series of five simple waves of rising rhythm, divided into two parts by a pause, is subject to the following variations:—

<sup>1</sup> This pause is regularly noted in the Ellesmere and Hengwrt Mss., and occasionally in the other Mss., by the sign /; in modern printing it is usually denoted by •.

§ 258. (1) Reversal of Rhythm.—The first rising wave of the verse and the wave immediately following the pause are very frequently reversed, giving the order 'x x', etc.

(a) At the beginning of the verse; e.g.—

' x x ' " ' x ' x"
Under his belt he bar ful thriftily 105.

' " " ' x ' x ' x '
Wel koude he dresse his takel yemanly 106.

' x x ' " ' " " x ' x
After the sondry sesons of the yeer 347.

" x x ' x ' x ' x ' x
In a tabard he rood vpon a mere 541.

So 125, 925, 2304, 2673, 2790, 2791, etc., etc.

(b) After the pause; e.g.—

x " x ' x ' ' x x '
And for to festne his hood under his chyn

x ' x ' ' x x ' " '
He hadde of gold wrought a ful curious pyn 195, 196.

x ' x ' ' x x ' x '
Who wrastleth best naked with oille enoynt 2961.

So 320, 393, 503, 680, etc., etc.

(c) Often in both places; e.g.—

' x " ' ' " x " " 'x
Trouthe and honour · fredom and curteisie 46.

§ 259. (2) Additions to the normal verse:—

(a) An extra unstressed syllable is frequently added at the end of the verse, and often before the pause. In the latter case two stressed syllables occur together without any reversal of the rhythm; e.g.—

' " x ' x x ' x ' " 'x
That in hir coppe ther was no ferthyng sene 134.

' " x ' " x ' x " x 'x
He was a shepherde and nocht a mercenarie 514.

' " x ' " . x ' " ' x ' x
Myn is the stranglyng and hangyng by the throte 2458.

x ' x " ' x ' x ' x ' x
Thanne seyde he O crewel goddes that gouerne 1303.

So 131, 494, 613, 1097, 2002, 2464, 2503, 2523, etc.

(b) Very rarely an extra unstressed syllable is added at the beginning of a verse; clear instances are:—

x x ' " ' . ' x x ' " "
With a thredbare cope as is a poure scoler 260.

x x ' x ' x ' x ' x ' x
Seuene hennes for to doon al his plesaunce B 4056.

(c) But after the cæsura at the beginning of the second part of the line the extra syllable is frequently added;<sup>1</sup>

e.g. —

" ' " ' . x x ' x " x ' x
Ther nas no tygre in the vale of Galgopheye 2626.

x ' x ' . x x " x ' x ' x
Ne me ne list thilke opinions to telle 2813.

x ' x " . x x " x " x '
Disherited of hir habitacioun 2926.

x ' x " x ' . x x ' x "
Is likned til a fissh that is waterlees 180.

x ' x " . x x ' x ' x '
And Arcita that is in the court roial 1497.

x ' x ' . x ' x ' . x x '
And some wol haue a Pruce sheeld or a targe 2122.<sup>2</sup>

§ 260. 3. Subtractions from the normal verse:—

(a) The unstressed syllable which begins the verse is frequently omitted:—

' x ' x . ' x ' x '
Twenty bookes clad in blak or reed 294.

" x ' x ' " " x '
In a gowne of faldyng to the knee 391.

<sup>2</sup> The cæsuras are as marked in a.

' x ' " " x ' " '
Armed were they as I haue yow told 2126.

' x ' x ' " ' x ' x
Funeral he mighte al accomplice 2864.

' x ' x " x ' x "
Nymphes, Fawnes, and Amadrides 2928.

So 247, 1656, 2511, 1535, 2489, etc.

(b) Possibly, too, the unstressed syllable at the beginning of the second half of the verse was occasionally omitted.<sup>1</sup> But this is rare in the Prologue and Knichtes Tale. It does not seem possible to scan 2770 in any other way:—

' " " ' . ' x ' x ' x
Syn that my lyf may no lenger dure.

2367 also yields the best rhythm when scanned—

x ' x ' x ' . ' " '
The nexte houre of Mars folwyngē this, since such a stress group as folwyngē is unusual in Chaucer; see § 183.

THE DIVISION OF THE VERSE INTO SYLLABLES

While the syllable division of M.E. verse is in the main that of M.E. prose, there are some losses and slurrings of unstressed syllables that are peculiar to poetry.

ELISION

§ 261. A final unstressed e is lost before a word beginning with a vowel, before h in the lightly stressed words he, his, him, her, hit, and sometimes before how and heer; e.g.—

' x ' x ' x " x ' x
The droghte of March hath perced to the roote 2.

' " x ' x ' x ' x "
Wel koude he dresse his takel yemanly 106.

<sup>1</sup> A theory stated by Zupitza in Archiv für das Studium der neuen Sprachen, 89, 354, but the clear instances are so rare as to make the matter exceedingly doubtful.

On which ther was first write a crowned A 161.

" ' " ' " ' " ' <sup>x</sup> "
Yow loueres axe I now this questioun 1347.

§ 262. But the elision is not always carried out; e.g. —

That on his shyne a mormal hadde he 386 (cf. 298).

" ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup>
No berd hadde he, ne neuer sholde haue 689.

So doute it 1322, cride A 1078, same is 2904.

§ 263. Elision sometimes occurs before words beginning with h other than those given in § 261, but only where the h begins an unstressed syllable. Instances do not occur in the Prologue and Knichtes Tale; but cf. to habundant B 4115, and blisse habounde E 1286, crie 'Harrow' A 4072.

§ 264. The elided -e is not always an inflectional syllable; e.g. —

(1) After l and r: —

' <sup>x</sup> <sup>x</sup> ' " ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> '
That of hir smylyng was ful symple and coy 119.

Of Aristotle and his philosophie 295.

' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> " <sup>x</sup> <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> '
So peple his apes 706, vnto his ordre he was 214.

<sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> " <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> '
Of woodecraft wel koude he al the usage 110.

' <sup>x</sup> "
So the effect 1189, the opposit 1894.

<sup>1</sup> Whether or not this elision took place before a word beginning with a consonant is not yet certain.

(3) The -e of the unstressed negative particle : —

Ne I ne axe nat tomorwe to haue uictorie 2239.

(This weakening of ne also frequently occurs before words beginning with a consonant ; but there are no clear instances of it in the Prologue and Knights Tale.)

§ 265. Other unstressed vowels than -e are sometimes elided before a following word beginning with a vowel.

(1) The unstressed -o in to with the infinitive (also in unto occasionally) ; e.g. —

And certes lord to abyden youre presence 927.

This elision is sometimes indicated in the writing ; e.g. —

This was the forward, pleyedly for tendite 1209.

(2) ē in romance words (but rarely) ; e.g. —

The groynynge and the pryuee empoysonyng 2460.

Departed is with dueteē and honour 3060.

§ 266. An initial unstressed vowel is frequently lost after a word ending with a long vowel or diphthong ; e.g. —

And where they engendred and of what humour 421.

So estatly was he of his gouernaunce 281.

So are to be explained thou art 1608, I am 1618, By eterne word 1109.

SYNCOPE OF UNSTRESSED SYLLABLES

267. The loss of the medial unstressed vowel before a single liquid or nasal (cf. § 78) was probably more common in poetry than in prose.

§ 268. Unstressed e before a final liquid or nasal is frequently slurred. This usually takes place before a following unstressed syllable beginning with a vowel or h: —

His berd was shaue as nygh as euer he kan 588.

<sup>x</sup> ' " ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> ' <sup>x</sup> '
In curteisie was set ful muchel hir lest 132 (cf. 211).

For he hadde geten hym yet no benefice 291.

So possibly 394, 400, though in these instances the verse-pause coming after the syllable in question allows us to scan the lines in accordance with § 259 (a).

§ 269. In a few words of romance origin ending in -le, -re (? = -el, -er), the final -e is slurred before words beginning with a consonant, in which case they would seem to come under § 268 rather than under § 264: e.g. —

Of his diete mesurable was he 435.

And yet this Maunciple sette hir aller cappe 586.

§ 270. Words ending in -ie (-ye) are subject to the principle stated in § 78 (c); e.g. murie steuene 2562. But -ie (-ye), -ue- in the middle of a word often counts for but one syllable, the i or u becoming consonantal y or w;<sup>2</sup> e.g. bisi'er 322, cary'eden 2900, famul'ier 215 (cf. B 1221), muri'erly 714, perpetu'elly 1176.

§ 271. This also usually takes place when the -ie, -ue is final and followed by an unstressed word beginning with a vowel or h, the three vowels thus merging into one syllable ; e.g. —

Thyn is the victorie of this aventure 1235.

Solitarie he was and euere allone 1365.

The rede statue of Mars with spere and targe 975.

So 870, 872, 916, 917, 1898, 2698, 3057.

Sometimes, however, only the -e of -ye is lost ; e.g. —

Ne yet the folye of kyng Salamon 1942.

Of felonye and al the compassyng 1996.

§ 272. The final y of many and any is often joined to a following vowel ; e.g. many˘a 349, 350, 406, 2101, any˘other 1611.

§ 273. This and is are frequently joined in one word in M.E. verse ; cf. B 4247 and variants.

RHYME

§ 274. Chaucer's rhymes as a rule depend upon the pairing of vowels and diphthongs which are alike in respect both of quality and quantity. The exceptions are as follows : —

- (1) Words which we should from their history expect to have  $\bar{e}$  often rhyme with words whose development requires  $\bar{e}$ , and vice versa.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> These are chiefly words containing O.E.  $\bar{a}$  (cf. § 66, note). To cover such cases Ten Brink assumed a class of words which sometimes had  $\bar{e}$  and sometimes  $\bar{e}$ . As a large per cent of these words are such as show a change from  $\bar{e}$  to  $\bar{e}$  in early N.E. being written with ea, where we should expect ee or ie, perhaps the simplest assumption is that they were already becoming open in Chaucer's time.

(2)  $\bar{\rho}u$  regularly rhymes with  $\bar{\rho}u$  in Chaucer (cf. §§ 70 (b), (c), 75 (b)); but  $\bar{\rho}u$  and  $\bar{\rho}u$  do not rhyme with one another (cf. § 75 (c), (d)).

§ 275. The rhyme is always on the last stressed syllable of the verse. This may be followed by an unstressed syllable, thus making double rhyme; e.g.  $\overset{\times}{E} \overset{\times}{g} \overset{\times}{e} : \overset{\times}{T} \overset{\times}{h} \overset{\times}{e} \overset{\times}{s} \overset{\times}{e} \overset{\times}{u} \overset{\times}{s}$
2905, 6;  $\overset{\times}{r} \overset{\times}{e} \overset{\times}{n} \overset{\times}{t} \overset{\times}{e} : \overset{\times}{a} \overset{\times}{s} \overset{\times}{s} \overset{\times}{e} \overset{\times}{n} \overset{\times}{t} \overset{\times}{e}$ <sup>1</sup> 373, 4.

§ 276. The rhyming syllables may begin with the same consonant and thus be identical in sound; e.g.  $\overset{\times}{d} \overset{\times}{e} \overset{\times}{u} \overset{\times}{y} \overset{\times}{s} : \overset{\times}{s} \overset{\times}{e} \overset{\times}{r} \overset{\times}{v} \overset{\times}{i} \overset{\times}{s}$ uys 1425, 6; was come : ouer come 2799, 2800.

§ 277. In the case of double rhymes the unstressed part of the rhyme is often a separate word with light sentence-stress; e.g. nonys (nonce) : noon ys (none is) 523, 4.

§ 278. Words which are the same in sound may rhyme with one another provided their meanings or inflectional forms are different; e.g. —

he . . . caste : I caste 2171, 2. So in 1837, 8; 2233, 4.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF CHAUCER'S LIFE

GEOFFREY CHAUCER, the son of John Chaucer, a London wine merchant,<sup>1</sup> and of Agnes, his wife, was born, probably in London, about 1340. The date is a matter of inference from the known facts of his life. The most important of those bearing on his age are a few entries in a fragment of the Household-Book of the Countess of Ulster,<sup>2</sup> wife of Prince Lionel, the third son of Edward III., which record certain expenses for the clothing and gratuities of Geoffrey Chaucer. As the sums set down against his name are in each case small in comparison with those paid to the other servants of the Household, it has been concluded that Chaucer was a page in the family. The record is for the years 1357-1359, and Chaucer, if a page, must have been then under twenty. Again, in the Prologue to the Man of Lawes Tale, the poet tells us that in his youth he wrote about Ceyx and Alcioun, the story made use of in his poem on the Dethe of Blaunche, the Countess of Lancaster (cp. Globe Chaucer, p. 311), which is evidently early work and must have been written in 1369 or 1370.<sup>3</sup> Had he been

<sup>3</sup> But there may have been a poem of earlier date on Ceyx and Alcioun, which was later incorporated into the Dethe of Blaunche.

born earlier than 1340, he would hardly have referred to himself as a youth at this time.

Again, in giving testimony at the Scrope trial on October 15, 1386, Geoffrey Chaucer is described as being of the age of forty years and upward (xl ans et plus), and as having borne arms for twenty-seven years. As the ages of the other deponents are put down but roughly, in some cases being in error by as much as ten years, no great importance is to be attached to the clerk's statement that Chaucer was forty years old and upward. But the entry concerning his military service is more significant, and is vital to the competence of Chaucer's testimony as to how long the Scrope family had worn the arms they claimed. He testifies that in the French campaign of 1359, up to the time when he was taken prisoner, he had frequently seen Sir Richard Scrope publicly bearing the arms in question. The clerk's statement, "armed for twenty-seven years," then amounts to saying that the French expedition of 1359 was Chaucer's first campaign. If he had been born later than 1340, he would have been less than twenty years old at the time.

Fitting this scanty evidence together, scholars have assumed 1340 as the date of Chaucer's birth. This would make him a seventeen-year-old page in 1357, a nineteen-year-old soldier in 1359, and a young poet writing on the Dethe of Blaunche, at twenty-nine.

While Hoccleve's address to Chaucer as "Universal fader of science" is likely to be a somewhat exaggerated title, there is, nevertheless, such abundant evidence of wide reading and familiarity with mediæval learning in Chaucer's work that we may easily assume for him an education, for his time, comparatively accurate and complete. But there is no direct evidence as to where he obtained it. It may have been in the household of Prince Lionel, it may have been at Oxford or at Cambridge. Both Universities have put forth their claims, but as yet they have offered nothing more than claims. His familiarity with the surroundings of Cambridge, as shown in the Miller's Tale, could have been gained without residence there. His connection with Strode and the tradition that his son Lewis studied at Oxford is equally untrustworthy evidence of his having himself been an Oxford student. Chaucer tells us of his fondness for reading, and we know from the Prologue what a shrewd observer of men and things he was; such a disposition making the best use of the opportunities of a great house would naturally have produced a fairly well-trained scholar without the aid of either of the Universities.

Our first accurate knowledge of the poet is that we get from the Household-Books already referred to, covering his service with the wife of Prince Lionel during the years 1357-1359. That he took part in the French campaign of Edward III., probably in the retinue of Prince Lionel, and was taken prisoner, we have from his testimony in the Scrope suit. In March, 1360, the king contributed £16 to his ransom (money was worth then from ten to twenty times what it is now).

From 1360 to 1367 we know nothing of Chaucer. On June 20, 1367, he is granted by the king a pension of twenty marks, the payment of which in half-yearly instalments of £6 13s. 6d. begins on November 6 of the same year. The pension is for past and future services, and he is styled dilectus valettus noster; so it is likely that Chaucer had already been in the Royal Household for some time, and had enjoyed considerable favor. His duties as valet were those of personal attendance upon the king.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For an account of what such service was, see Life Records, II., edited by Dr. Furnivall, Chaucer Society, 1876.

The sums thus recorded from time to time in the Issue Rolls of the Exchequer as drawn per manus proprias or by deputy, tell us something of Chaucer's whereabouts when each payment is made.

In an order for gifts to the Household on December 25, 1368, he is called "squire of less degree." He is first called armiger when sent on secret business of the king on December 1, 1372, though in a subsequent payment of his pension he is again valettus. After November 22, 1373, however, he is always armiger.<sup>1</sup>

His position of valet and squire soon grew into the more responsible one of diplomatic messenger to the king. There is official record of his having been in France in 1369. In 1370 he receives letters of protection for travel in foreign parts. On November 12, 1372, he is one of a commission to treat with the Duke and citizens of Genoa (and the record adds that he went to Florence, too), about choosing a port for a Genoese commercial establishment in England. He starts on this mission on the 1st of December, and returns on the 28th of April, 1373. It used to be thought that this his first Italian journey was the occasion of his becoming acquainted with Petrarch, then living at Acqua near Padua. But the shortness of Chaucer's visit makes this unlikely.<sup>2</sup>

From this time on, evidences of royal favor are frequent and significant. On April 3, 1374, a pitcher of wine daily is granted him for life, a favor which is commuted to an annual pension of twenty marks in the first year of Richard II. On May 10, 1374, Chaucer leases a house over the gate known as Aldgate, which he occupies until October, 1386.

<sup>1</sup> The records from which these and similar statements that follow are drawn are designated in Dr. Furnivall's Temporary Preface to the Six-Text Chaucer (the permanent preface is not yet published), in Professor Skeat's Oxford Edition of Chaucer's Works, Vol. I., and in Sir H. Nicholas' Memoir of Chaucer (to be found in Vol. I. of the Aldine Edition of Chaucer's Works, by Dr. Morris), where many of them are printed in full.

On June 8, 1374, he is made Comptroller of Customs on Wools, Skins, and Tanned Hides, with the express stipulation that he shall perform his duties himself and not by deputy. How onerous they were one can gather from reading Hous of Fame (Globe Chaucer, p. 566), 139 ff. On June 13 he is granted another pension of £10 for life on account of the good services of himself and his wife, Philippa, to "the Duke (of Lancaster) and his consort, and to his Queen." In 1375 he is the recipient of two lucrative appointments as guardian of the minors, Edmond Staplegate and William de Solys, of Kent.

In 1376 the king awards him the fine of £71 4s. 6d. which John Kent was amerced for shipping wool to Dordrecht without paying the duty.

In December, 1376, and in February, 1377, he is again abroad on secret business of the King, on the latter occasion in Flanders, whence he returned on the 25th of March. On April 20 he is granted letters of protection to be in force until August 1, being again engaged in the king's business abroad. This was doubtless as one of the commissioners to negotiate a peace with France. In June, 1377, Edward III. died.

During this period (1367-1377), Chaucer's career was brilliant and rapid. Marks of royal favor, pensions, diplomatic missions, all attest the confidence the king had in him. And it was no wonder. Any one who will read the Prologue carefully can see why Chaucer, even without friends and poetic talent, should have been successful at court.

Quiet, modest, tactful, shrewd, full of sly humor, it is not strange that he should have been often intrusted with the king's business. It was during this period, or some little while before, that he married. The date is uncertain, and there has been much dispute about the person and position of his wife. It is clear that her name was Philippa Chaucer on December 12, 1366, and that she was one of the ladies in waiting on the Queen, though her title, domicella cameræ Reginae, is not evidence that she was unmarried. We know that Philippa Chaucer was Geoffrey Chaucer's wife on May 31, 1377. It is likely that they were married as early as 1366. If they were not married then, they must have been cousins and married at least as early as 1374. Speculation can go further and connect a Philippa Panetaria (?) in the household of the Countess of Ulster in 1357, with the Philippa who afterward became Philippa Chaucer. There is much evidence, too, pointing to the conclusion that Philippa, demoiselle of the Queen's chamber, was the daughter of Sir Payne Roet of Hainault, and sister of the Katherine Roet who was John of Gaunt's third wife. If this is so, the Thomas Chaucer who bore the Roet arms, and was a man of some eminence in the early part of the fifteenth century, was Geoffrey Chaucer's son, and Elizabeth Chaucer, for whose novitiate in the Abbey of Barking, John of Gaunt paid £51 8s. 2d. in 1381, may have been the poet's daughter. The question, however, is not definitely settled.<sup>1</sup>

The Royal favor and confidence which Chaucer enjoyed under Edward III. did not cease with the king's death. Early in 1378 he is sent on an important mission to France to negotiate for the marriage of the king with the French Princess, and again in May, 1378, to Italy, power of attorney having been granted to John Gower, the poet, and Richard Forrester to represent him during his absence. He probably returned on the 19th of September. In 1379-1380 there is scant official trace of him. The spring payment of his pension in 1379 (May 24) is by deputy, which would lead to the inference that he was then absent from London, but on December 9 he received the money per manus proprias. On the 8th of May, 1382, he is appointed Comptroller of the Petty Customs of the Port of London, with permission to discharge his duties by deputy. On November 23, 1383, he is especially commended for his assiduity, labor, and diligence in his office, and on the 17th of February, 1385, he is permitted to discharge the duties of his Collectorship of Customs on Wool, etc., by deputy. In 1386, he is elected a member of Parliament from Kent.

During this Parliament John of Gaunt and the Lancastrian party lost the power which they had hitherto held over the young king. Administrative changes followed, and in December, 1386, the poet had to give up both his Comptrollerships. The straitened circumstances into which this cast him give us the probable explanation of his assigning two of his pensions to John Scalvy on May 1, 1388. But he still retained the one granted by the Duke of Lancaster in 1374. The last payment of his wife's pension is recorded on June 18, 1387, giving ground for the inference that she died between this and the time for the next payment. The period that followed must have been the darkest of Chaucer's life. His affairs changed for the better, however, a year later, when Richard II. took the reins of government in his own hands. This occurred on the 3d of May, 1389, and two months later, July 12, Chaucer received the appointment of Clerk of the King's Works, which gave him a regular income of two shillings a day.<sup>1</sup> He occupied this office, however, for only two years, and was succeeded in it by John Gedney, September 16, 1391.

In the autumn of 1390 he was the victim of a highway robbery, losing his horse and £19 3s. 8d. of the king's money. The robbers were caught and punished, and Chaucer was expressly released from the obligation to make good the loss by a writ of January 6, 1391.

From this time on he seems to have been frequently in straits for money. He writes to his friend Scogan, at Court, to use his influence in his behalf (Globe Chaucer, p. 632). Royal favor must have still remained to him, for on February 28, 1394, Richard granted him a pension of £20, which he draws frequently in advance. In 1398 his enemies are suing him for debt, and the king again intervenes with letters of protection. In October, 1398, the king grants him a tun of wine.

The accession of Henry IV. in September, 1399, brought to the throne the son of Chaucer's former patron, the Duke of Lancaster, and a personal friend. The poet is not long in making a direct appeal to him with a "Complaint to his Empty Purse" (Globe Chaucer, p. 634), which meets with a generous response in the way of a pension of 40 marks. With this pension, and his earlier one of £20, Chaucer must have looked forward to a period of ease and comfort in the house in the garden of St. Mary's Chapel, Westminster, which he leased for a rental of £2 13s. 4d. at Christmas, 1399.

<sup>1</sup> Three official documents connected with his incumbency of this office were copied and published by Mr. Selby in the Athenæum for January 28, 1888, p. 116.

In 1400 the half-yearly pension granted by Richard II. is paid February 21, and on June 5, £5 of the half-yearly sum of £8 13s. 6d. due him is drawn for him by Henry Somer. This is the last official trace we have of Geoffrey Chaucer. On October 25, 1400, according to a tradition probably well founded, and already current in 1556, he died, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.<sup>1</sup>

The impression which Chaucer made on his contemporaries almost always finds expression in their admiration of his skill in the use of language.

Even in the dark ages of English criticism, when all accurate knowledge of Middle-English idiom was lost, when ignorance of Middle-English sounds and inflections had obscured, in a large measure, the delicacy of his rhythm, and when the blind following of Renaissance traditions made all but the best of English literature appear mean and vulgar, even then Chaucer's matchless skill in using words seems to have been felt distinctly, despite ignorance and prejudice. And it is not strange. There is no writing like that of the Prologue in all English literature, save in Shakspeare.

But it is not only a skill in words ; it lies deeper than that in an intimate knowledge of men and things, the source of all literary excellence. Of his Canterbury Pilgrims each has his peculiar dress, his peculiar character, even his peculiar idiom. And they act on one another with that friction and resistance which make up human life. The stories they tell are mediæval, though not without literary graces, due to Chaucer's handling, but the story-tellers themselves are modern, or rather, being human, are for all time : Harry Baily, with his rough tact and his jolly good nature, not without its tincture of shrewdness, as when he tells them his journey with them will not cost them a penny, all the while knowing that the success of it and the story-telling will line his fat landlord's pockets with good coin of the realm; the courtly knight; the lady prioress; the rascally monk; the scant-haired, pious fraud of a Pardoner; the half-drunken miller; the absent-minded, shy student; the shrewd lawyer, who seemed shrewder than he was; the kindly parson; the doctor, long in league with the apothecary; nay, the poet himself, poking fun at his own early attempts in Romantic verse. Thrown together for a few days of travelling, in the hands of the poet they play their parts with such skill that their jolly group haunts the reader with an exuberance of life that makes generation after generation of English men and women debtors to their shy, mirth-loving creator. It may be doubted if there is anywhere a single literary work of the compass of Chaucer's Prologue into which so much human interest has been packed. And it is worth any student's while, be he young or old, to master Middle-English, if only to read this one piece of its literature.

THE MSS. OF THE CANTERBURY TALES

THERE are fifty-seven known Mss. of the Canterbury Tales, all of which vary more or less from the original prototype. The intricate problem of their various relations to one another was solved, at least for the Pardoner's Tale, after long and tedious toil by the late Professor Zupitza of Berlin.<sup>1</sup>

Of these Mss. seven are accessible in the publications of the Chaucer Society, viz. : Ellesmere (El), Hengwrt (Hn), University Library, Cambridge, Gg, 4.27 (Gg), Corpus (Co), at Oxford, Petworth (Pe), Lansdowne (Ln), Harleian 7334 (H<sub>4</sub>). As worked out by Professor Zupitza, the Mss. fall into four groups : the first group (Group  $\alpha$ ) contains only El and Hn, and is incomparably superior to the others in point of accurate representation of Chaucer's inflections ; the second group (Group  $\beta$ ) contains six Mss., no one of which has yet been printed ; the third group (Group  $\gamma$ ) contains three Mss., one of which, Gg, is printed in the Six-Text Edition of the Chaucer Society ; the fourth group (Group  $\delta$ ) contains three known Mss., one of which is H<sub>4</sub>, and the lost source of a large number of late and untrustworthy Mss. which we designate collectively by the Greek letter  $\epsilon$ . These late Mss. divide into subclasses called by Zupitza the Se Group and the Tc<sub>1</sub> Group respectively. Out of the Se Group flows the Pe Group (represented by Petworth in the Six-Text Edition), and from the Tc<sub>1</sub> Group is derived the Co Group (represented in the Six-Text by Corpus and Lansdowne). The relationship of the texts used for this edition may be conveniently represented by the following diagram:—

The grouping arrived at by Zupitza for the Pardoner's Tale holds also for the tales printed in this edition. H<sub>4</sub> shows a peculiar set of variations of its own, most of them evidently due to the effort of the scribe to correct what seemed to him infelicitous rhythms.

It has been suggested that H<sub>4</sub> represents Chaucer's own revision of the Canterbury Tales; but a study of its individual peculiarities shows that most of them are due to an effort to make up in the rhythm for lost inflectional syllables, or to remove irregularities of verse structure, or to modernize Chaucer's vocabulary; and the effort does not always meet with a happy success. Such efforts at botching are apparent, e.g., in 292, 299, 305, 307, 324, 334, 363, 746, 772, 778, 803, 876, 2012, 2489. A few changes are, perhaps, betterments; cf., e.g., 485, 528, 686, 1906, 2037. It is evident that in H<sub>4</sub> we have an edited Ms., the work of an unusually intelligent scribe; that the scribe worked from a Ms. of the  $\delta$ group, but had before him a Ms. of the  $\alpha$  group, and possibly a Gg Ms., which he consulted frequently.<sup>1</sup> If it were not that many of his changes are so weak, and so often betray a misunderstanding of the text, and that no trace of them is found in later Mss., we might be tempted to attach some importance to his work. But as it is, they lack authority, whether they are for better or for worse, and Chaucer scholars have long made the mistake of paying too much attention to them.

In printing the variants, mere variations of spelling are not noted, and readings peculiar to a single Ms., save in the case of El or Hn, are likewise not recorded unless they possess unusual interest.

To make an ideal Chaucer text we need several good Mss. of the  $\beta$  group, including Cambridge Dd 4. 24 and another Ms. of the  $\gamma$  group, to decide the issue for us in cases where the weight of Ms. evidence is evenly distributed. But such cases are not very frequent in the Prologue and the Knights Tale. Scribes are always at their best in the early part of a long piece of copying. Even without this additional testimony, therefore, the student may feel a reasonable confidence in the text here presented, the first really critical text for any part of the Canterbury Tales.

THE PROLOGUE

WHAN that Aprille with his shoures soote
 The droghte of March hath perced to the roote,
 And bathed euery veyne in swich licour
 Of which vertu engendred is the flour ;
 Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth 5
 Inspired hath in euery holt and heeth
 The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
 Hath in the Ram his halue cours yronne,
 And smale fowles maken melodye,
 That slepen al the nyght with open ye, 10
 So priketh hem nature in hir corages ;
 Thanne longen folk to goon on pilgrimages,
 And palmeres for to seken straunge strondes.
 To ferne halwes kowthe in sondry londes,
 And specially from euery shires ende 15
 Of Engelond to Caunturbury they wende,
 The hooly blisful martir for to seke,
 That hem hath holpen whan that they were seeke.

 And eek ye knowen well how that a Iay
 Kan clepen "Watte" as wel as kan the pope.
 But whoso koude in oother thyng hym grope,
 Thanne hadde he spent al his philosophie ; 645
 Ay "Questio, quid juris?" wolde he crie.
 He was a gentil harlot and a kynde ;
 A bettre felawę sholde men nocht fynde.
 He wolde suffre for a quart of wyn
 A good felawę to haue his concubyn 650
 A twelf monthe, and excuse hym atte fulle.

KNIGHTES TALE

HEERE BIGYNNETH THE KNYGHTES TALE

WHILOM, as olde stories tellen vs,
 Ther was a duc that highte Theseus ; 860
 Of Atthenes he was lord and gouernour,
 And in his tyme swich a conquerour
 That gretter was ther noon vnder the sonne ;
 Ful many a riche contree hadde he wonne.
 What with his wysdom and his chiuallrie 865
 He conquered al the regne of Femenye,
 That whilom was y-cleped Scithia ;
 And weddede the queene Ypolita,
 And broghte hir hoom with hym in his contree
 With muchel glorie and greet solempnytee, 870
 And eek hir yonge suster Emelye.
 And thus with victorie and with melodye
 Lete I this noble duc to Atthenes ryde,
 And al his hoost in armes hym bisyde.
 And certes, if it nere to long to heere, 875
 I wolde hauē told fully the manere
 How wonnen was the regne of Femenye
 By Theseus and by his chiuallrye ;
 And of the grete bataille for the nones

PART II.

Sequitur pars secunda.

Whan that Arcite to Thebes comen was, 1355
 Ful ofte a day he swelte and seyde, ' Allas !'
 For seen his lady shal he neueremo.
 And shortly to concluden al his wo,
 So muche sorwe hadde neuere creature
 That is, or shal, whil that the world may dure. 1360
 His slep, his mete, his drynke, is hym biraft,
 That lene he weex and drye as is a shaft :
 His eyen holwe and grisly to biholde,
 His hewe falwe, and pale asshen colde,
 And solitarie he was and euere alone, 1365
 And waillynge al the nyght makynge his mone :
 And if he herde song or instrument
 Thanne wolde he wepe, he myghte nat be stent.
 So feble eek were his spiritz and so lowe,
 And chaunged so that no man koude knowe 1370
 His speche nor his voys, though men it herde :

1350. Hn e moot he. 1353. a Co Pe list. 1362. El Pe wexeth.
 1364. a falow. 1369. e he for 2d so.

And in his geere for al the world he ferde,
 Nat oonly lik the loueris maladye
 Of Hereos, but rather lyk Manye
 Engendred of humour malencolik 1375
 Biforen in his celle fantastik ;
 And shortly turned was al vpsodoun
 Bothe habit and eek disposicioun
 Of hym, this woful louere daun Arcite.

What sholde I al day of his wo endite? 1380
 Whan he endured hadde a yeer or two
 This crueel torment and this peyne and woo,
 At Thebes, in his contree, as I seyde,
 Vpon a nyght in sleep as he hym leyde,
 Hym thoughte how that the wynged god Mercurie 1385
 Biforn hym stood and bad hym to be murie.
 His slepy yerde in hond he bar vprighte,
 An hat he werede vpon his heris brighte.
 Arrayed was this god, as he took keep,
 As he was whan that Argus took his sleep. 1390
 And seyde hym thus, 'To Atthenes shaltou wende,
 Ther is thee shapen of thy wo an ende.'
 And with that word Arcite wook and sterte.
 'Now trewely, hou soore that me smerte,'
 Quod he, 'to Atthenes right now wol I fare, 1395
 Ne for the drede of deeth shal I nat spare
 To se my lady that I loue and serue ;
 In hir presence I recche nat to sterue.'

And with that word he caughte a greet mirour,
 And saugh that chaunged was al his colour, 1400

With Arcita, in stories as men fynde, 2155
 The grete Emetreus, the kyng of Inde,
 Vpon a steede bay trapped in steel,
 Couered in clooth of gold, dyapred weel,
 Cam ridyngē lyk the god of armes, Mars.
 His cote-armure was of clooth of Tars 2160
 Couched with perles, white and rounde and grete ;
 His sadel was of brend gold newe y-bete ;
 A mantelet vpon his shulder hangyngē,
 Bret-ful of rubyes rede as fyr sparklyngē ;
 His crispe heer, lyk rynges was y-ronne, 2165
 And that was yelow and glyterēd as the sonne.
 His nose was heigh, his eyen bright citryn,
 His lippes rounde, his colour was sangwyn ;
 A fewe frakēnes in his face y-spreynd,
 Bitwixen yelow and somdel blak y-meynd ; 2170
 And as a leoun he his lookyng caste.
 Of fyue and twenty yeer his age I caste,
 His berd was wel bigonne for to spryngē ;
 His voys was as a trompe thonderyngē ;
 Vpon his heed he werēd of laurer grene, 2175
 A gerland, fressh and lusty for to sene.
 Vpon his hand he bar for his deduyt
 An egle tame, as any lilye whyt.
 An hundred lordes hadde he with hym there,
 Al armed saue hir heddes in al hir gere, 2180
 Ful richely in alle maner thynges.
 For trusteth wel that dukes, erles, kynges,
 Were gaderēd in this noble compaignye

NOTES

1. Whan that<sup>x</sup> is the usual stress arrangement in M.E.; see § 258 (a). For soote, see §§ 64, 81 (b). shoures: the au-sound in the corresponding N.E. word shows that the apparent diphthong here is ū, see §§ 20, 77 (2); so in the case of droghte 2 (for spelling, see § 6), flour 4, fowles 9, Southwerk 20, deuout 22, oure 34, etc.

3. swich licour of which vertu, see § 210. licour: the qu in the corresponding N.E. word is due to an imitation of the spelling of Lat. liquor; the ou is ū as in seson 19 (for spelling, see § 6), resoun 37, condicioun 38, honour 36. Similarly, wherever the corresponding N.E. word has the sound ɔ in place of the M.E. ou, the M.E. ou represents ū.

4. vertu. Here u = ü, see §§ 21, 39; so in nature 11, auenture 25.

5. The west wind is frequently thus associated with the spring in English poetry. breeth, which should historically have ĕ (O.E. bræð, O.H.G. prādam), see § 66, Note 4, here rhymes with heeth, which has ē (O.E. hæð, cp. Ger. heide); cp. § 274 (1).

7. yonge: because just beginning to run through the Zodiac, whose first course was Aries, covering the last half of March and the first half of April. yonge sonne: the corresponding N.E. words have the sound ɔ in their accented syllables (see § 19, and compare longen 12), and therefore these are cases where N.E. u is written o before m or n, or after w or c. So in the case of yronne 8, sondry 14, come 23, worthy 43, loued 45.

8. cours: here ou = ū; N.E. course is from another M.E. form of the word, viz. cors.

13. palmeres were a sort of professional pilgrim in Chaucer's day.

14. To ferne halwes, etc., is usually taken with goon. But a prepositional clause frequently precedes its verb in Chaucer: cf. 82, 83, 110, 158; cf., too, F. 738,

*But atte laste she for his worthynesse,
And namely for his meke obeysaunce,
Hath swich a pitee caught of his penaunce, etc.*

14. kowthe: ow = ū; N.E. uncouth anomalously preserves the ū sound. So with trouthe 46, and yow 38.

17. The 'blessed martyr' was Thomas à Becket, whose shrine was at Canterbury.

For rhyme seke: seeke, see § 278.

Seke in M.E. is frequently associated with worship; cf. Romaunt of the Rose, 6241.

Hooly wymmen

That men in cherchis herie and seke.

1-18. These introductory verses have in them the very breath of the springtime. Note the associations: the pleasant showers, the soft west wind, the budding shoots, the singing birds, with a hint of spring love longing, the desire to travel through the green fields (German wander-lust), the grateful feeling of recovery from winter sicknesses. Note, too, the dancing, sinuous rhythm. In reading the passage special care should be taken to catch the secondary stresses:—

1. Whan that Aprille with his shoures soote
 x ' x " x " x ' x ' x
 x ' x " x " x ' x ' x
 5. Whan Zephirus eek with his sweete breeth
 " x x ' x ' x " x ' x
 8. Hath in the Ram his halue cours yronne
 x ' " " x ' x ' x ' x
 13. And Palmeres for to seken straunge strondes
 x ' x " x ' x " x ' x
 16. Of Engelond to Caunterbury they wende
 x " x ' x " x " x ' x
 18. That hem hath holpen whan that they were seke

19. Bifil, see §§ 163, 188. on a day, 'one day,' see § 117.

21. Redy to wenden, etc., see § 258 (a).

22. with ful deuout corage, 'with a very devout heart,' gives a personal interest to Chaucer's narrative. It may be that he himself had suffered from an illness, and was making his pilgrimage in consequence of a vow.

24. Wel nyne, etc., see § 228.

27. wolden, 'intended,' a frequent meaning of the M.E. auxiliary.

29. atte beste, see §§ 87, 115 (e); 'in the best manner possible.'

30. was to reste, 'had set.' The ellipsis of gon in such expressions is common; cf. 2637, where the full form of the phrase occurs.

31. spoken. Evidences of Chaucer's winning powers of conversation appear all through the Prologue. Note how, in his descriptions of the various members of the company, he represents the peculiar point of view and phraseology of each; cf., e.g., 183.

33. made, see § 188.

34. ther = thither. deuyse has a shade of future meaning; hence Chaucer considers 35 ff. as a digression.

37. Me thynketh, etc., cf. similar expression in 2207.

40. whiche, 'what sort of persons,' see § 211.

43. and that, see § 203.

44. That . . . he, see § 206.

45. To riden out, 'to travel.' Out in the sense of 'abroad,' 'in foreign lands,' is still used in Shakspeare's time; cf. Lear, I. I. 25, 'He hath been out nine years.' Such words as chivalrie: curteisie, which had -ie in O.Fr. (Lat. -ia), preserved the dissyllabic ending in e.M.E., and in Chaucer rhyme only with such English words as have -ie historically. They therefore do not rhyme with words in -y, like worthy in 43. There are a few intentional exceptions in the Rime of Sir Topas: e.g. Gy: chivalry, B 2092, where the poet is seeking to give the "Romance" flavor to his verse. This rhyme habit is a convenient criterion for distinguishing Chaucer's poetry from contemporary Northern verse, where it is not observed, and from the poetry of the immediate imitators of Chaucer, e.g. Hoccleve and Lydgate, who are careless about it, though some of his later fifteenth century imitators follow his practice.

46. Note the double reversal of rhythm; see § 258 (a), (b).

48. therto, i.e. in addition to his service for his sovereign. riden is a general expression for travelling. It is often associated with go, 'to walk,' in the phrase ride or go as a sort of generic expression; literally "travelling a-horseback or travelling a-foot." For ferre, see § 125.

49. as in hethenesse, see § 259 (c).

50. And euere honoured, etc., 'and had always been held in high esteem for his bravery.' For omitted verb, see § 214; for rhythm, see § 268.

52. i.e. this English knight had sat at the head of the table (cf. N.E.D. begin, 5) at the state banquets of the Knights of the Teutonic Order ('in Pruce'), taking precedence of all the other foreign knights. In the fourteenth century Natio was used to denote the various divisions of foreign students at Paris and Vienna, according to the countries from which they came. The O.Fr. word was similarly used to refer to foreign residents (Godefroy, Dictionnaire, Complement, nacion). Possibly nacioun (for the Ellesmere spelling, see § 6) had some such use among the Knights of the Teutonic Order.

54. Lettow (Lithuania), Pruce (Prussia), and Ruce (Russia) were the countries of 'hethenesse,' which were the usual scene of the campaigns of the Teutonic Knights.

60. armee, an expedition by sea; cf. N.E.D. army, I. The arriue, 'disembarkation,' which Skeat and many editors take from H<sub>4</sub>, is not found in English in this sense.

62. Such combats with Saracen knights were not uncommon in Chaucer's time.

66. i.e. here, as at Tramysse, the adversary of the Sire de la Palice and our knight was a Saracen.

67. 'And ever after had enjoyed a high renown.' In M.E. souereyn prys has a peculiar use in reference to chivalry, expressing the highest honor and glory of knighthood; e.g. "and tell of me no prys," Fierumbras, 173.

69. as is a mayde. Chaucer uses this expression to describe the shyness of the Oxford student in E 2.

72. gentil, 'noble'; not N.E. 'gentle'; cf. N.E.D., s.v. I.

73. for to tellen, see § 216.

74. His hors, etc. hors is plural; see § 100. gay means 'gayly dressed'; see N.E.D., gay, A. 4. The knight is not contrasted with his horses, though that is the meaning often given to the passage, and the reading of Hn, H<sub>4</sub>, is therefore sometimes selected so as to bring stress upon he; 'but' is almost equivalent to 'though.'

76. For scansion see § 260 (habergeoun is so stressed). The knight's dress still showed the marks of the coat of mail he had lately worn. In the stress of battle he had made a vow to go on a pilgrimage to Canterbury if he got safely out of it, and he was now fulfilling the vow at his first opportunity without waiting to go home and change his raiment.

81. as they were leyd in presse, 'as if they had been put in a press' seems to be the meaning. In Troilus, I. 559 (Gl. Ch., p. 446) we have

" God saue hem that biseged han our toun,

That so can leye our Iolite on presse

And bring our lusty folk to holinesse."

82. Of twenty yeer, etc. In N.E. the of is omitted with numerals; in M.E. it is the common idiom; cf. 'He hath a sparth of twenty pound of weight,' 2520. Yeer is plural; see § 100.

83. of euene lengthe, 'of proper height,' not 'of medium height.' Translate: 'his figure was well proportioned.'

84. of greet strengthe. Most editors patch the text here with the reading from H<sub>4</sub>, greet of strength. But of greet strengthe makes good sense, and is paralleled just below in 137.

86. i.e. in the Low Countries between the Schelde and the Somme. But space refers to time rather than to place, the squire being only twenty.

88. lady grace, cf. § 97 (a).

89. as it were, 'as if he had been,' 'like.'

100. Carving was one of the regular duties of a well-bred young gentleman in Chaucer's time.

101. There were four grades of knightly service, as we learn from Sir Amadas:—

"Knyght, Sqwyar, Yomon, or Knaue, Non with hym he broght."

— WEBER, Metr. Rom., III., p. 270.

"Knyzte, squiere, zoman, and knaue, Iche mon in thayre degre."

— ROBSON, Three Metr. Rom., p. 47.

So the first he must refer to the knight, not the squire.

104. Pecok arwes were arrows feathered with peacock feathers. That they were of fine workmanship we learn from v. 107. Ascham's Toxophilus (Arber's Reprint, p. 129) explains what Chaucer means by the adjective lowe:—

"Now to looke on the fedders of all maner of birdes, you shal se some so lowe" (i.e. lying close to the rib) "weke, and shorte, some so course, stoore, and hard, and the rib so crickle thin and narrow that it can nether be drawn, pared, nor yet well set on."

And on p. 132 we get the meaning of droupe:—

"But in a weake fether you must leave a thicker ribbe or els yf the ryb . . . be taken to nere the fether, it must nedes folowe that the fether shall faule and 'droupe' downe."

115. For omission of predicate, see § 214.

120. By seinte Loy. The reference is to St. Eligius, the patron saint of goldsmiths and farriers. Professor Hale's explanation that Chaucer here refers to the story of St. Eligius' refusal to take an oath, and means to say that the Prioress did not swear at all, is probably the correct one.

121. Madame Eglentyne, i.e. 'My Lady Sweet-Briar.'

123. Entuned, i.e. chanted, 'hummed.' It was one of the duties of the chauntries "by kallyng ouer from oo syde to another as nede is, to entune to the abbes softly alle the antems that she is to begyn in double festes or other. Euery other wyke the quyer shal vary, so that it be on the abbess syde oo wyke, and on the prioress another wyke." Mirroure of Our Lady, E.E.T.S., p. xxxvii.

125. In this verse Chaucer merely intends to say that the Prioress spoke the Anglo-French of the Benedictine nunnery at Stratford le Bow, and not the Parisian French, which he as a diplomat was familiar with.

134. sēne is the O.E. adj. gesēne (here without the y-), which eventually took the place of the regular participle of sēon, viz. gesegen, M.E. yseyne. Chaucer still distinguishes the two, using the adjective only after the verb substantive; in other cases he uses yseyne (there is no M.E. perfect participle seen). The rhyme clēne (O.E. clāne): sēne (O.E. gesēne) is that of open  $\bar{e}$  with close  $\bar{e}$ .

137. of greet desport, i.e. full of fun.

139. peyned hire, 'she took pains (subject omitted) to imitate court manners.' The merchant also affects a stately demeanor, v. 281.

140. estallich probably represents stallich; cf. 281, B 3902, T. and C. V. 823, Leg. 1372, where it is written staately.

146. Of smale houndes, see § 192.

147. i.e. fine white bread from the table, not the coarse bread usually given to dogs.

148. The Mss. reading wepete (wk. pret. subj.) is here retained because the weak form of the verb was undoubtedly in use by Chaucer, and weep does not remove the difficulty; for we must have the subjunctive here (cf. § 221), and its strong form is wepete. If the line is to be amended, it would be better to omit the subject she. Read wepete, and scan according to § 259 (a).

150. And al was, etc., 'and she was all,' etc. For the omission of the subject see § 188.

152. tretys, 'well shaped.' Cf. Rom. of Rose, English version, v. 1216 (Gl. Ch., p. 672), which Chaucer probably had in mind.

164. and Preestes thre. If the Prioress had three priests with her, the Canterbury pilgrims numbered thirty, not twenty-nine, as stated in v. 14. Moreover, the title of the tale assigned to the Nonnes Preest, and the prefixed prologue, point to but one priest in this capacity. Dr. Furnivall has shown that a Prioress might have several attendant priests, so this latter difficulty is removed. Of the various expedients resorted to in order to escape these difficulties none is quite satisfactory. The easiest supposition is that Chaucer was here guilty of slight inadvertency, and wrote the words as we have them in all the Mss.

167. manly, 'handsome,' not 'manly.'

170. For rhythm see § 260 (a). The reference is to the bells worn on the bridle-rein.

175. The usual pointing supposes a violent anacoluthon after 174, taking leet pace together as meaning 'let go.' lat is here taken absolutely, 'fail to take,' 'neglect,' a usual M.E. meaning of the word, and olde thinges pace a parenthetical justification of Chaucer's by a sly allusion to 2 Cor. v. 17. The cæsuras in both El and Hn follow Monk, but these scribes may have misunderstood the verse as the scribe of H<sub>4</sub> did. The secondary stress on leet is not unusual, cf. e.g. v. 274.

178 ff. The first of Chaucer's 'texts' has not yet been found, though allusions to the impiety and wickedness of hunting abbots are common in mediæval literature. The second is very old, and is found in patristic literature as early as the fifth century. recchelees seems to have a peculiar meaning here, 'careless of regulations,' so that Chaucer has to explain what he means in vv. 181, 182. Various emendations have been suggested, 'rewlelees,' 'cloysterless' of H<sub>4</sub>, 'recetless,' i.e. refugeless, but no emendation is necessary in view of vv. 181, 182.

183. "And I told him his view of the matter was entitled to serious consideration. Why should he study or drive himself mad by continually poring over a book in his cloister [a sly hint at the monk's stupidity], or work and toil at manual tasks [a thrust at his laziness]? The world has need of all kinds of men; St. Austin can work all he has a mind to [manual labor being an important item in the Benedictine and Augustinian rules]. And so he was a keen sportsman [serving the world in that capacity] etc." This passage is an excellent illustration of Chaucer's humor, which usually contains an element of veiled irony slyly interjected by the turn of a phrase or the use of a suggestive word—here in the stress: And I [you might not have been so liberal, gentle reader] seyde his opinioun [as well as the 'sentence' or 'iuggement' of the fathers — notice the subtle difference between opinioun, 'view of a case' and such a word as 'sentence'] was good [i.e. worthy of serious consideration].

193. I seigh, 'I noticed.'

194. the fyneste of a lond, 'the best that could be had.'

210. the ordres foure were (1) the Dominicans, named from Dominic de Guzman, their founder, called also the Black Friars from their dress, and Jacobites from the church of St. James in Paris, where they were first established, and Preaching Friars (Fratres Predicatores) from their occupation; (2) the Franciscans, or Gray Friars, or Minorite Friars, followers of St. Francis of Assisi; (3) The Carmelite or White Friars, an order founded on Mount Carmel in 1156; (4) the Augustinian order, which Chaucer alludes to above. The fact that the initials of the ordres foure (Carmelite, Austin, Iacobite, Minorite) made out the word CAIM (the mediæval form of Cain) was a common mediæval jest.

"Nou se the so the whedre it be swa
That frer Carmes come of a K,
That frer Austynes come of A,
Frer Iacobynes of I;
Of M comen the frer Menours:
Thus grounded Caym thes four ordours."

WRIGHT, Political Poems, I. 266.

This may help the student to remember their names.

212. i.e. had made good matches for women who had been his concubines.

225-232. Humorously reflects the friar's own reasoning, as 183 ff. reflects the monk's.

227. For if he yaf, 'for if a man gave something, . . . he knew that he,' etc.; cf. § 200.

247. See §§ 233, 260 (a).

254. In principio (erat verbum, John i. 1) was a text constantly on the lips of the begging friars, cf.

"For ye win more by yeare with In principio than with all the rules that ever your patrons made."

JACK UPLAND, Wright's Political Songs, II., p. 23.

256. That is, what he acquired by begging (purchas) amounted to more than his income (rente). This expression is found also in D 1451, and in Rom. of Rose, 6837. It was probably proverbial.

276. Professor Hales in the Athenæum for April 8, 1893, has called attention to the fact that the wool staple was changed from time to time during the fourteenth century, and was at Middleburg only during the period 1384-1388, so that Chaucer must have been writing this passage at that time. Middleburg is in the Netherlands, nearly opposite Harwich, whose port was known in Chaucer's time as Orewelle. kept means 'protected,' 'guarded,' 'kept open.'

281. The efficacy of dignity as a means of concealing one's financial condition was evidently not unfamiliar to Chaucer.

286. Four years of logic was requisite for the B.A. degree, so that Chaucer's student was well advanced in his studies.

288. he, 'he himself.'

292. Ne was, etc., 'and he was not worldly-minded enough to secure secular employment.'

297. philosophre, besides having its modern sense in M.E., also meant 'alchemist,' which meaning Chaucer alludes to here.

301, 302. The reference is to the practice of mediæval students, who undertook to say masses for the souls of their patrons or their patrons' relatives in return for money given.

303. The awkward sentence stress, moost cure and moost hede, can be avoided by assuming a hiatus, cure and, with extra syllable before the cæsura, § 259 (a): thus Of studie took he moost cure and moost hede. (The cæsural pause is not marked for this line in El, and comes after studye in Hn.)

305. in forme, etc., 'with precision and dignity.'

306. ful of hy sentence, 'pregnant,' 'full of deep meaning.'

307. moral in M.E. refers rather to the civil and social, than to the religious duties, of man, so that moral vertu is nearly equivalent to N.E. practical wisdom. The application which the Merchant and Harry Baily make of the student's tale about the 'patient Griselda' illustrates this aspect of his character.

314. was, 'had been,' cf. § 225.

Iustice in Assise, a circuit judge sent down with royal commission to hold court in the country.

319. English estates are held in fee simple—that is, in absolute possession; or, in fee tail—that is, subject to various limitations and charges of entail. The law governing the latter is, of course, extremely complex and difficult.

320. Read His purchasyng myghte nat been infect with reversal after pause.

323. caas is plural, cf. § 101.

324. were falle, 'had been handed down.'

325. thyng has its primitive sense of 'agreement' here.

329. with barres smale. The "barres" were metal ornaments through which the tongue of the buckle ran.

330. Chaucer's humorous way of saying that he could not remember the other details of his dress.

331. A Frankleyn was a man of property and importance, ranking below the knight—a sort of country squire.

336. Epicurus owene sone, a more or less proverbial expression for a high liver. Chaucer's philosophy comes from his Boece, 641 (Gl. Ch., p. 381), 'The whiche delit oonly considered Epicurus, and iugged and establissyde that delyt is the soverayn good' ('verray felicitee parfit').

340. St. Julian was the saint who protected travellers, and therefore the patron of hospitality. The writer of his legend in the Scottish Legendary (Barbour's Schottische Legendsammlung, ed. Hortsman, p. 218) refers to a custom familiar to his boyhood. He tells us that the weary traveller, when he came in sight of his lodging, would take off his hat, remove the right foot from the stirrup, and say a paternoster to St. Julian.

351. Wo was his cook, 'there was trouble in store for his cook.' This, and such phrases as 'wo is me,' show the original dative construction. But all feeling for it was lost in M.E., and in Chaucer we have wo used as an adjective, as in Tro. V. 529 (Gl. Ch., p. 539):—

"But, Lord, this sely Troilus was wo."

353. table dormant, a table fixed in the floor in contradistinction to the usual form of table which was placed on trestles so as to be readily removable. The Squire kept open house.

355. At sessiouns, at the meeting of the Justices of the Peace. Lord and Sire, the presiding officer. The ther, like the ther in v. 258, repeats the adverbial notion. It is redundant in the corresponding N.E. construction.

356. knyght of the shire, his county's representative in Parliament.

359. shirreue, the king's administrative representative in his county; countour, the king's legal representative (advocatus regius) (Herzberg). But the word in its M.E. usage also seems to denote the functions of comptroller and auditor.

360. vauasour, in the sixteenth century a sub-vassal holding a small fief of a duke, marquis, or earl, and in degree inferior to a baron (see the dictionaries of Cotgrave and Cowel). The word had probably this meaning in Chaucer's time, as shown by the quotations in Du Fresne's Glossarium (s. v. vassor), and in Godefroy's Dictionnaire de l'Ancienne langue Française (s. v. vavassor).

361 ff. The text does not stand in need of mending, though Chaucer editors often adopt the H<sub>4</sub> var. in 363. Chaucer continues the enumeration of the party, and omits the verb, as is usual also in N.E.; cf. § 214.

363. in o lyuerec. The guilds were distinguished by livery; e.g. 'King Harry the V.' granted that the Guild of St. George, Norwich (established 1385), 'be cladde in o sute of clothyngge.' English Guilds, Smith, E.E.T.S., p. 445.

367, 368. See § 214.

371. kan, see § 224.

377. al bifore, 'right in front' (gon means 'walk'). The 'vigilies' were ceremonies held on the eve of the guild festival. In the ordinances of the Guild of Worcester such a vigil is described. The wardens of the craft and all its members were to wait upon the Bailie of the city 'in ther best arraye harneysed,' having provided a cresset for the procession. English Guilds, p. 408.

379. for the nones, see § 135.

386. The mormal, called in medical books malum mortuum, was some sort of a running sore, as appears from remedies for it in the M.E. pharmacopœia; cf. e.g. Heinrich, M.E. Medicinbuch, p. 141. There seems to be a delicate connection between the depth of Chaucer's sympathy for the cook's affliction and the quality of his blankmanger.

388. by weste, 'to the westward.' Chaucer thinks it was Dartmouth, one of the most important ports of his time. An interesting paper on Chaucer's Sailor will be found in the Chaucer Society's Essays, V, p. 455 ff.

390. as he kouthe, 'as well as he could,' being a sailor.

396. i.e. on the way home from Bordeaux he had been in the habit of surreptitiously helping himself to the wine while the supercargo was asleep. (The rascal had been telling Chaucer about it.)

398. Of nyce conscience goes with what follows, and does not mean 'conscientious scruples,' but 'fine feelings.' The methods of trading in Chaucer's time were not over nice, as the records which have come down to us show. Legitimate trade and piracy were not sharply distinguished, and our sailor, when his ship got the better of another, was not too squeamish to send his victims (hem is the general indefinite pronoun) 'home by water' by making them walk the plank. Chaucer seems to be quoting the fellow's grim jest.

401. Note the contrast in the participle: 'But in his trade (not these piratical avocations), in carefully calculating tides, currents, risks (and they must have been always about him in those days of uncharted seas), his port, phases of the moon, pilotage, there was none like him between Hull and Carthage.'

405. wys to vndertake, 'prudent in running risks.'

410. Mr. W. D. Selby has found in the records of the Port of Dartmouth entries of a ship called the Maudelyne, once in 1379 and twice in 1386 (cf. Chaucer Society's Essays, V., p. 384), evidence of the reality of Chaucer's representative interests in the Prologue.

414. Astrology was closely associated with mediæval medicine, the successful operations of medicines being thought to depend upon fortunate astrological conditions. Natural magic, as we learn from the Hous of Fame, III. 175-180 (Gl. Ch., p. 573), was practised by 'clerkes': they made images in certain ascendants through which they were able to 'make a man ben hool or syk.' Chaucer says that the doctor was able to ward off evil influences by this means, but does not indicate very clearly just how it was done. He intended to write a treatise on the subject as a part of the Astrolabe, but did not carry out his plan.

420. Diseases in mediæval medicine were supposed to be caused by an excess of one of the four 'humours' (heat, cold, moisture, dryness) over some other.

427. We see that the league between the druggist and the doctor is an ancient joke.

428. newe to bigynne, 'late in beginning,' 'of recent date.'

429-434. These were the chief medical authorities of the Middle Ages.

439, 440. Dressed rather elaborately; it was part of the trade.

441. A thrifty fellow whose philanthropy did not prevent his taking fees during pestilence. Chaucer's sly irony sounds like the doctor's own justification of the rich harvest he had made during the plague-time, 'Gold is a good medicine' being an allusion to aurum potabile, a remedy which figured in the materia medica of the time.

445. Good wif has nothing to do with housewifely excellences, but is a compound noun, as the stress shows, like Good-man, and, like the term mistress, designates a 'worthy' woman, with an independent income.

449. The form parshe preestes in Piers Plowman, B, X. 264 gives good grounds for supposing that the unstressed middle syllable of parisshe sometimes suffered syncope, but I doubt if Chaucer intended it here and in 491. The verses scan very well as they stand; cf. § 259.

450. Referring to the precedence observed when the parishioners went up with their offerings. Chaucer's parson particularly mentions it as a form of pride, I. 408 (Gl. Ch., p. 279).

452. out of alle charitee. For alle see § 143. It passed the bounds of her Christian forbearance. Chaucer ironically draws her bad temper somewhat mildly.

454. Heavy and elaborate head-dresses were common in Chaucer's time. The 'I dorste swere' shows the joking exaggeration; cf. the similar spirit in 471.

456. Hir hosen. The illustration in the Ellesmere Ms. shows her riding man-fashion, her skirts covered with riding leggings reaching to the hips. Perhaps these were the hosen.

459. she was, etc., 'she had been a woman of property all her life.' Chaucer seems to hint at a connection between vv. 459 and 460.

460. At chirche dore. The mediæval marriage service was often conducted in the church porch.

463. The M.E. syncopated form of Ierusalem is Iersalem (not Irusalem (Skeat) nor Ierwsalem (ten Brink), as is shown by Orm's spelling of the word; cf. also the M.E. version of Palladius de Re Rustica, I. 1180, ed. Liddell, Berlin, 1896 (the passage is not in the E.E.T.S. edition): —

"Laude, ymne, honour, empire & songe vnto
The flour of Iesse spronge in Bethlëem,
Whom Symeon seid of, and Anne, and moo
In oon bisought Osanne at Iersalem."

465. The shrines she had visited were popular in the Middle Ages.
467. wandrynge by the weye, 'travelling.'
468. soothly for to seye; a humorous touch of human sympathy like that in 446. Professor Skeat cites Notes and Queries, 1st Ser., vi., p. 601, where a young lady records a popular superstition that one whose teeth are set far apart will be lucky and travel. But this very slight evidence seems to be the only trace of such a belief.
472. foot mantel. It is doubtful what this word means. This is the only passage quoted in the N.E.D. in which it does not mean a sort of saddle-cloth. In the picture of the Wyf of Bath it seems to be a blue outer skirt of some sort.
476. the olde daunce, 'the rules of the game'; see N.E.D., s. v. dance.
478. Persoun of a Toun, 'a country parson.'
486. to cursen for hise tithes. Excommunication was an extreme penalty for non-payment of tithes.
489. offryng, 'voluntary contributions'; substaunce, 'private property' or 'income.'
497. wroghte, 'worked.' The picture of the parson trudging through the storm to comfort a distant parishioner regardless of the wretch's social position is one of those happy human interests so common in Chaucer.
498. gospel, Matt. v. 19: "Forsothe this that doth and techith shall be clepid grete in the kyngdame of heuenes." The 'figure' (parable) he added was a common one in the patristic literature of the time; see Kittredge, Modern Language Notes, xii. 113 ff. That in M.E. is frequently used, as here, to introduce a direct quotation.
502. For syntax, see § 218.
- 507-514. Chaucer's reference is to a contemporary abuse among country priests, viz., that of farming out their benefices and going up to London to earn money by singing masses, or to be supported by a religious brotherhood. St. Paul's was a favorite resort for these chantry-seekers; Tyrwhitt cites Dugdale, who gives the number there as thirty-five.
518. discreet, the stress is on the prefix.
521. But, 'unless'; see § 220.
523. for the nonys, 'on account of that very thing'; i.e. his pride and haughtiness.
526. A spiced conscience was one that depended on formal distinctions, spiced being identical in meaning with N.E. specious.

529. For omitted relative, see § 188.
531. 'An honest toiler and a brave was he.'
534. gamed is impersonal. The expression was a stereotyped one in M.E., 'in joy or woe.'
545. For the nones, which usually means 'for that very thing,' seems here to be used as a mere expletive to carry on the narrative. But possibly stout is used in the M.E. sense of 'bold,' as in v. 2154, in which case there should be no comma after v. 545: "The miller was a bold fellow only because he was big of brawn and bone; and his boldness was justifiable, for," etc. He surely lives up to this character in A 3120 ff. (Gl. Ch., p. 43).
548. Rams were the usual prizes of country wrestling bouts.
554. hāde; see § 84 (b).
561. And that; see § 203.
563. To have a thombe of gold was a common expression to describe the value of a miller's skill in testing flour between the thumb and finger. Chaucer gives the proverbial expression a humorous twist, taking gold as representing moral purity.
565. In Chaucer's day the bagpipe was a musical instrument in great favor among the common people, see N.E.D., s.v.
567. Maunciple . . . of a temple, the steward of one of the Inns of Court. For the rhythm, see § 269.
573. Note Chaucer's sly humor: "Here was a fellow without a university education whose native wit surpassed the wisdom of a heap of learned men (the very benchers of the Inns of Court), thirty of them skilled in the devious ways of the law, and a dozen of them fit to be trustees of any estate in England and make its owner live honorably on his income (unless he was a fool), or as economically as he wished to—men able to help a whole county out of a panic—and yet this Maunciple swindled them all. Truly a divine gift!"
- 587 ff. The Reue was the bailiff of an English estate. He kept account of grain (v. 593), seed (vv. 595, 596), and stock (vv. 597, 598), subject to the occasional supervision of an auditor (594); saw that the respective stores of implements, etc., belonging to his lord and the laborers were not confused (vv. 602–605), and superintended the laborers' work (v. 605). Chaucer's reeve seems to have managed his lord's business affairs too, and like the 'unjust steward' to have turned his trust to his own advantage.
589. For the rhythm of this verse see § 259.

595. by the droghte, etc., 'in a dry season or in a wet one.'
603. baillif, either the steward or reeve of another estate, or the præpositus or foreman of the laborers appointed annually from one of their number, though this officer is usually designated 'reeve' in M.E.
606. Had he been telling Chaucer about his home?
611. To yeue and lene, etc., see § 217.
614. wel good, cf. § 228.
616. In v. 622 we see why it was Chaucer noted the horse's name; the Reeve being a 'coleric' man must have ill endured the slow gait of his horse. Bell, in his edition of Chaucer, says that the horse-name 'Scot' is still common in Norfolk.
621. 'His surcoat tucked under his legs like a friar's gown.'
623. The Summoner was an officer who cited persons before ecclesiastical courts. These courts tried matrimonial causes and such offences as fornication and adultery, as is evident from what follows.
624. cherubynnes were a common feature of mediæval church adornment, and were painted fyr reed, so that 'cherubin-faced' became a proverbial expression.
625. sawcefleem (Lat. salsum phlegma); i.e. his face was covered with pimples, boils, and eruptions. The disease was thought to be caused by too much salt humor in the blood. A remedy for it, compounded of lily-root, 'swynes-grece,' powdered ginger, powdered gillyflower, and quicksilver, is given in a M.E. pharmacopœia (Heinrich, Mittelenglisches Medicinbuch, p. 211). Another is found in Boorde's Introduction and Dietary (E.E.T.S.), p. 102, where its causes are said to be 'bad food,' 'late drinking,' and 'overeating.'
- 628 contains a delicate touch of human interest. Had Chaucer noticed the village youngsters pointing out the awful visage as the pilgrims rode along their route?
644. 'But if one should try him on another subject.'
646. Questio, quid juris? 'Question, what is the law?' i.e. 'I appeal to the authorities,' a phrase frequently on the lips of ecclesiastical lawyers.
651. atte fulle, cf. § 87.
652. 'To pull a finch' was a M.E. figurative expression corresponding to 'pluck a pigeon,' still current in England, according to the N.E.D., and equivalent to 'catch a sucker.'
655. The Archdeacon presided over the lowest ecclesiastical court, and his extreme weapon was excommunication. Chaucer humorously makes his Somonour explain "when the archdeacon talks about 'opening the horrible gates of hell' (—'horribiles inferi portas pandimus' was part of the formula of excommunication), his 'hell' that he is going to open is your purse." A characteristically sly allusion to the corruptibility of archdeacons, with the ironical parenthesis, "I'm sure the fellow lied, for we all know that as absolution saves the soul, so excommunication slays it." In the Apocalypsis Goliæ (Poems ascribed to Walter Mapes, publications of the Camden Society, p. 9) we get a picture of the sort of corruptible archdeacon Chaucer had in mind. The Elizabethan translation of it (p. 275) runs:—

"I read the chapter next, and there did understand

Th' Archdeacon's trade and life, whose course was next of all,
If anie thing by chaunce did scape the Bisshopes hand,
With toothe and naile to scratch, and tear in pieces small.

And when he heares the pleas of persons at debate

In forme of canon lawe he workethe subtilie;
For he the canon lawe can turne, even in like sorte

To Symon's court, which ['so that the canon law'] is th' Archdeacon's Mercurie."

662. Significavit; Tyrwhitt notes that "The writ de excommunicato capiendo (for imprisoning an excommunicated person) was commonly called significavit from the beginning of the writ, which was as follows: 'Rex vicecomiti L. salutem. Significavit nobis venerabilis pater H.L. episcopus,' etc." (Compare a similar N.E. practice of naming writs from the opening words, e.g. a writ of scire facias.) Coles (1713) defines significavit as "a writ for the imprisoning him that stands obstinately excommunicate forty days." The word was probably clipped in pronunciation to sin'-fi-ca-vit, and a Latin final -t often rhymes with an English -th in M.E.

663. 'He kept the young people (girles means young people of both sexes in M.E.) of his diocese in his power according to methods of his own.'

666-668. He seems to have made his pilgrimage a festival occasion. The cake-buckler is a conspicuous feature of his dress in the Ellesmere portrait of him.

670. Tyrwhitt's suggestion that the "Pardoner was not from Roncesvalles, but was the member of some fraternity like that of the 'Blessed Mary of Royncevalle' at Charing, London," is probably correct.

672 refers to the burden of a popular song, Come hider, loue, to me. Mr. Gollancz thinks that two verses in the Pearl, “Cum hyder to me, my lemman swete,

For mote ne spot is non in the,”

are a reference to the same song; see his note, Pearl, p. 124. But the rhythm is too dissimilar to make this likely.

689. ne neuer sholde haue. Chaucer evidently did not like the fellow, though he shows the same humorous respect for his skill in his trade that he showed for the Shipman's.

692. fro Berwyk (in the north of England) into Ware (in the south) was a proverbial expression for all England, like 'from John a Groats' to Land's End.'

693. Jusserand's Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages contains an interesting chapter on Pardoners. The student will find the Pardoner's own account of his methods in C 329 ff. (Gl. Ch., p. 145).

702. upon lond, 'back in the country.'

708. noble ecclesiaste is ironically spoken like 'noble post' in 214.

710. alderbest, cf. § 113.

714. The 'therefore' has a tinge of Chaucer's merry irony in it. For the form, murierly, cf. § 127.

718. gentil hostelrye gives a touch of human interest to the narrative, 'this excellent inn.'

720. is tyme; see § 188.

725-742. These lines contain Chaucer's justification for some of his stories which follow. The fact that he felt such an apology necessary, as well as the so-called retraction at the end of the Canterbury Tales (which there is good reason for supposing was written by another apologist than Chaucer), shows clearly that even the rather loose morality of mediæval England was somewhat shocked by the freedom and vulgarity of some of his tales. Chaucer himself admits that they are rudelich, large, and brod; but he gives only an explanation, not a justification. His argument from Plato (though he probably did not feel it to be so) is a piece of bare sophistry, and the 'broadness' of the Bible is the frank recognition of the fundamental facts of human life, which is the finest purity. Even Chaucer's humor and humanity are but a partial excuse, and cannot make some of his tales fit reading for virginibus puerisque or for any one else. Some of his writing is not really offensive any more than Henry IV. is offensive, the objectionable features being but part of the every-day life they describe — the words are ‘cousin kin,’ at least, to the subject matter. But unfortunately we cannot justify all of Chaucer’s writing, or all of Shakspeare’s either, on the same grounds.

728. To telle, ‘in telling,’ cf. § 217.

729. proprely, ‘in their own way.’

731. shal, ‘is going to,’ almost ‘undertakes to.’

733. euerich, see § 117, note 1.

734. rudeliche, see § 121.

736. Or feyne thyng, ‘or invent subject matter.’

737. althogh he were his brother; the he is the indefinite personal pronoun, ‘the man he is talking about.’

741. Chaucer probably quotes Plato from Boethius, cf. Boece, 1118 (Gl. Ch., p. 402), “thow hast leryned by the sentence of Plato that nedes the wordis moot be cosynges to the thynges of whiche thei speken.”

743. For the sake of dramatic interest, the poet does not make his pilgrims tell their stories in the order of their precedence, and humorously excuses his offence against propriety on the ground that his mind was not equal to the task — ‘ye may wel vnderstonde.’

751 ff. From here on to the end of the Prologue, and in the brief prologues and epilogues of the several tales, Chaucer shows a dramatic power in representing the words and actions of men and women that is not surpassed even by Shakspeare. Not that dramatic representative interest is wanting in the rest of his work, but that here and in the ‘links’ there is that abundance of life and humanity which characterizes Shakspeare. The flux, so to speak, is his delicate humor searching out the hearts of men and women beneath all the many envelopes of time and custom, and in it human life yields up its true values, the very essence of dramatic representation. The versification of this passage should receive the student’s careful attention; he should notice especially the reversals of the rhythm, giving vividness and variety to the narrative; the lines which have no introductory unstressed syllable, e.g. 752, 764, 778, introducing abruptness here and there; the strong stresses, e.g.

" ' x ' x "
 " Now lordynges trewely
 ' " x ' " ' x ' x "
Ye been to me right welcome hertely," etc.,

giving a personal flavor to the verse.

751. Chaucer, in his description of Harry Baily, and in all the words which he puts into the big man's mouth, betrays that love of soundness and health which is the very keynote of English character.

752. For to been a marchal, etc., not only because he was so fine-looking, but because he showed such tact in setting us down to supper.

754. Chepe, Cheapside in London, where prosperous merchants were to be found in abundance.

756. manhod, cf. 'manly man' in Chaucer's description of the monk.

760. The sly Chaucer again! The landlord's good humor is intimately associated with the prompt payment of the pilgrims' scot. Cf. it shal coste noght, 768, "it shan't cost you a penny"; the shrewdness of 799; the humor in 804, right at myn owene cost, "I'll not put it in your reckonings"; the practical forfeit he imposes in 805, 806; and the fixing of the price of the supper they were to have on their return, 815 — undoubtedly a suggestion of mine host's, though Chaucer leaves that to inference.

763. if that I shal nat lye; this and such expressions as by my fader soule, 781, to speken short and pleyn, 790, I mene it so, 793, as euere mote I drynke wyn or ale, 832, were stereotyped phrases which made up the small change of M.E. conversation.

766. doon yow myrthe, 'make you enjoy yourselves'; cf. myrthe, 767, 'means of amusement.'

767. A happy inspiration solves his difficulty.

769, 770. A touch of reverence and seriousness, and sympathy withal.

777. yow, dative, 'if it please you.' by oon assent goes with stonden.

779. werken, 'do.'

782. yeue has been marked as a monosyllable in order to prevent an Alexandrine. But to scan it as such makes better stress (at least in N.E.).

783. Hoold vp, etc., i.e. in sign of assent.

784. longe for to seche, see § 218.

785. Vs thoughte, etc., 'it seemed to us that it was not worth while to be on our guard,' with wys in the common M.E. sense of 'prudent,' rather than of 'wise,' as it is generally taken. The host has asked their assent to a proposition as to the real nature of which they are still in the dark.

791. to shorte with oure weye, 'to shorten our journey with'; the significance of the pronoun 'oure' lies in its giving his auditors the first inkling of his purpose to go with them, and the I mene it so following, 'I am serious in the matter,' gives the reader a hint of the surprise that the intending pilgrims betrayed when Harry Baily told them of his purpose. Not appreciating this, modern editors have substituted youre for oure, one of the botchings of the scribe of H<sub>4</sub>.

792 ff. This passage shows that the Canterbury Tales, like Chaucer's own tract on the Astrolabe and Spenser's Faery Queene, was conceived on a far larger plan than could be carried out by the author.

800. sittyng by this post, another instance of Chaucer's dramatic power. One can almost hear Harry Baily slapping the post affectionately to give point to what he is saying.

803. goodly (and not gladly, the lifeless emendation of H<sub>4</sub> adopted by modern editors) means 'courteously,' 'as a favor to you.'

811. preyden, omitted subject, 'we begged him.'

817. In heigh and lough, 'in matters important and unimportant.'

823. The host was up before any of the rest of them, 'shaping him for the journey.' Note Chaucer's humorous touch in 'and was oure aller cok' and in 'gadrede vs togidre alle in a flok.'

825. a litel moore than paas, 'a little faster than a foot pace.'

826. The wateryng of Seint Thomas was, according to Nares (Glossary, s.v. wateryng), a brook at the second milestone on the Kent road. A small volume dealing with the route of the Canterbury pilgrims in Chaucer's time is one of the books promised by the Chaucer Society. A tracing of the route from the Ordnance maps with some explanatory matter has already been printed in 100 copies for private distribution (— my copy bears no date, but I think it was given me in 1893). Dr. Furnivall's Temporary Preface to the Six Text Chaucer contains much interesting material on the relation between the route and the grouping of the Tales. There is also a copy of Saxton's map from London to Maidstone and Rochester, 1573-79, in the Tale of Beryn, Chaucer Society, Supplementary Tales, 2.

829. and it yow recorde, 'I will recall it to your minds'; see § 188.

830. A proverbial expression, 'if you will stand by last night's agreement.'

833. Whoso be, etc., 'if any one is,' see § 220.

837. Note the skill with which Harry Baily makes the knight, who might not like the vulgarity of the drawing, the Prioress, who might think it unlady-like, and the clerk, who hesitated from natural timidity, take the first drawings; then the bluff 'lay hond to, euery man' for the rest of the company.

844. auenture, 'fortune'; sort, 'fate'; cas, 'accident.'

850. goode-man here seems to be, from the stress and the suppression of the definite ending of the adjective, a compound noun.

851. obedient is almost equivalent to 'punctilious.'

853. shal, 'am to,' see note on v. 731.

THE KNIGHTES TALE

859. The olde stories were the mediæval romances, based upon Statius' Thebaid. Chaucer found his material in Boccaccio's Teseide, though he quotes Statius directly in the Compleynte of Faire Anelida and False Arcite (Gl. Ch., p. 336). He does not follow the Italian version very closely, only about one-sixth of his Tale bearing anything like a close resemblance to Boccaccio's, and he quite changes its spirit, infusing Germanic elements of romance into the classic story. The material early attracted him, and before it received its final form in the Knights Tale it had been used by him, partially at least, in the Compleynt already referred to, in three stanzas of Troilus and Criseyde, V. 1807-1827 (Gl. Ch., p. 557), and in the Parliament of Foules, 183-294 (Gl. Ch., p. 344). From the Legend of Good Women, v. 420, we get the name of an independent work of Chaucer's called Palamon and Arcite, — 'a story little known,' Chaucer adds. This is supposed to have been originally written in seven-line stanzas, and afterwards remodelled for the Knights Tale. The student who is interested in comparing Chaucer's version with Boccaccio's will find material for doing so in Mr. Henry Ward's margin notes, brief but clear, to the Six Text Chaucer, in the Chaucer Society's Essays, Pt. IV., p. 357 ff., and in Kissner's Chaucer in seinen Beziehungen zur italienischen Litteratur, Bonn, 1867, pp. 60 ff. The Teseide will be found in the edition of Moutier, Boccaccio, Opere volgari (17 vols.), Florence, 1827-34. The most accessible edition of Statius is in the Teubner series, edited by Bährens and Kohlmann; the best translation of it is that which was made by W. L. Lewis, Oxford, in 1767, but it is not very accessible. The part that relates to Chaucer's story is found in the XII Book of Statius.

876. The readings of El and H<sub>4</sub> seem to be attempts at emendation; but see § 260 (b).

884. Neither Statius nor Boccaccio speak of a storm at Hyppolyte's homecoming.

895. his mooste pride: moost is used as an attributive adjective in M.E.

896. Read He was war. as he caste his eye aside; cf. §§ 260, 259 (c).

908. i.e. 'that ye thus,' not 'ye that thus,' cf. § 188.

925. 'Fortune and hir false wheel' was a favorite picture of mediæval philosophy. The immediate source of it in Chaucer's case was Boethius, II., pr. ii; see Chaucer's translation of the passage, Boece, 307 ff. (Gl. Ch., p. 366).

957, 958. hente (pret.), and . . . comforteth (pres.); see § 226.

960. 'He would put forth his might with such vigor as to wreak vengeance,' etc.

968. go ne ride, cf. note on v. 48.

969. fully, i.e. 'even for.'

970. onward, 'having gone some distance.'

975. See § 271.

977. feeldes glyteren, i.e. 'all the country round about shines with the reflection,' a poetic exaggeration. To take 'field' as referring to the various 'charges' of his banner makes the sense awkward.

978. The penoun was triangular, the banner square, and borne only by a knight-banneret. There is a picture of the two in Planche, British Costume, p. 118.

979. Of gold ful riche, etc., 'rich with gold, having the Minotaur embossed on it.'

988. in pleyn bataille, 'in open battle.'

994. deuyse, 'give the details of.'

996, 997. See § 260.

1016-1019. i.e. their bearings showed that they were of royal blood and cousins-german.

1026. Note the variant in El. The scribe did not like or understand the coupling of the two tenses (see § 226), nor do modern editors who follow the 'improvement' he made.

1029. Terme of his lyf, 'during the period of his life.' It is a common M.E. phrase, and contains an old accusative expressing duration, cf. § 194.

1031. This verse makes good M.E. sense (the predicate 'are' being omitted, cf. § 214), and has more authority than the reading commonly adopted; see var. The fact that H<sub>4</sub> has not the dwellen . . . eek reading is especially significant.

1057. In dongeoun, as in habergeoun, the e is merely the sign that g has its "soft" sound.

1061. hadde hir pleyynge, 'took her pleasure.'

1078. bleynste is pret. of blenche, cf. § 175 (6).

1082. That art so pale, etc., see note on v. 908.

1087. Som wikke aspect, etc. In the Astrolabe, 160 (Gl. Ch., p. 646), Chaucer tells us what this unlucky aspect of Saturn was: "A 'fortunate ascendent' clepen they whan that no wicked planete, as Saturne or Mars or elles the Tayle of the Dragoun, is in the house of the ascendent, ne that no wicked planete have noon aspect of enemyte upon the ascendent." See note to v. 2456.

1089. although we hadde it sworn, 'even though we should swear it was not so.'

1091. For rhythm, see § 273; for syntax, § 196.

1105. Yow, 'yourself,' see § 201.

1117. The Mss. show that Chaucer wrote here syk and not sigh. The form also occurs in T. and C. IV. 1527 (Gl. Ch., p. 529).

1127. For the infinitive, see § 215.

1132. In a few rare instances in M.E., and does not introduce the connected phrase or clause, but follows with the meaning of N.E. 'also'; e.g. Palladius, I. 6: —

"So sende he me sense and science
Of my balade away to rade errour, Pallade and do to glade his excellence."

We may have such an idiom in this verse. If not, some word like 'pledged' is to be understood after 'ech.'

til is the northern M.E. form of the prep. to.

1133. for to dyen in the peyne, 'though we should die in agony for it,' is originally an O.Fr. phrase, 'mourrir en la peine.' It occurs in Troil. I. 674, and Rom. of the Rose, 3326. Compacts like this are common in mediæval literature. 'Sworn brothers,' 'wedded brethren,' 'fratres jurati,' were bound to aid and comfort one another, as Palamon says. See fratres conjurati in Du Cange and sworn brothers in Nares' Glossary.

1137, 1138. These verses evidently go with what follows, not with what precedes, as the usual punctuation assumes.

1147. conseil seems to have the meaning of 'confidant.' But no other use of the word in this sense is recorded in the N.E.D. (counsel, 7 b) before 1647, nor has the corresponding O.Fr. word this meaning. It may be a mistake for cosyn, cp. vv. 1131, 1161.

1156-1159. An ironical allusion to v. 1102 and Palamon's exclamation in v. 1104.

1164. The philosophers' saying was:—

“ Quis legem dat amantibus ?
Maior lex amor est sibi.” — BOETHIUS, de Cons. Phil. III., metrum xii.

Chaucer's translation of it is in the Boece, 1135, 1136 (Gl. Ch., p. 402). In vv. 1167, 1168 he adds a gloss found in the Aquinas Commentary on Boethius, “nam ex incenso amore homo sepius transgreditur legem.” 1167. positif lawe and swich decree, i.e. arbitrary and promulgated law as opposed to natural law, a distinction of mediæval jurisprudence.

1171. she (the indefinite pronoun), 'the woman he loves,' cf. note on v. 400.

1172. Here begins Arcite's third argument. For syntax, see § 218.

1177 ff. Æsop's fable of The Lion, the Bear, and the Fox slightly altered.

1201. Chaucer in using the word write forgets dramatic propriety. The story of Pirithous (Chaucer's spelling is an illustration of the confusion which attended the transfer of classic proper names into M.E.) and Theseus is found in Plutarch's Lives. But Chaucer took it from Le Roman de la Rose (8186 ff.), as Professor Skeat points out.

1209. pleynly for tendite, 'to record it in full.'

1251. Chaucer again takes his philosophy from Boethius and quotes directly from the de Cons. Phil. III., prosa ii., see Boece, 643 (Gl. Ch., p. 381).

1262, 1263. The edition of Boethius which Chaucer used contained the commentary traditionally assigned to St. Thomas Aquinas. These verses are a translation of one of the Aquinas glosses, 'ebrius scit se habere domum, sed . . . nescit quomodo ad eam redeat.' 'Drunk as a mouse,' 'drunk as rats,' were common comparisons up to Queen Elizabeth's time.

1293. See § 196.

1303-1312 is a reminiscence of a similar apostrophe in Boethius, I. metr. 5, where Boethius says (see Boece, 193, Gl. Ch., p. 360): "O thou what so euere thou be, that knyttest all boondes of thynges, loke on this wrecchide erthes. We men that ben noght a foul partie but a fair partie of so greet a work we ben turmented in this see of fortune." And above, 189, "O governour governynge alle thynges why refusestow oonly to governe the werkes of men, why suffrestow . . . that anyous peyne that sholde duweliche punysche felons punyssheth innocentes?"

1333. hym Arcite, cf. § 190.

1336. forth I wol yow telle, 'I will go on with my story.'

1344. upon in the sense of 'on penalty of' is common in M.E.

1347. The knight jestingly says that this question is one for the Courts of Love to decide. A discussion of these courts will be found in Harvard Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, Vol. VI., by W. A. Neilson.

1355. The division of the Knights Tale into two parts at this point seems to be the work of the Ellesmere scribe, as it is not found in any of the other Mss. The Hengwrt scribe divided the story at 1880, where the Ellesmere copyist introduces his second division. The Ellesmere division is only followed here for purposes of convenience.

1373. The 'disease of Eros' is, of course, a humorous expression for 'Love.' Mediæval psychology divided the brain into three 'cells,' the foremost being the residence of the imagination or fantasy, the middle that of reason, the hindermost that of memory. Chaucer describes Mania as being induced by a melancholy humor in the front cell. Shakspeare makes use of the same psychology in Macbeth, I. vii. 65, where he speaks of memory as being the 'warder of the brain.'

1376. As to the text of this verse, we have assumed an error in the original Ms. caused by passing from the n in Biforen to the h in his. According to N.E.D., 'before' has never had the meaning 'in the front part of.'

1387. Mercury's slepy yerde was his caduceus. Somnifera virga is a frequent designation of it in Ovid.

1389. The reference is to the story told in Ovid's Metamorphoses, i. 714.

1394. hou soore, etc., 'however bitterly I may suffer for it.'

1401. For rhythm, see § 259 (c).

1421. here, 'her'; see § 131.

1423. myghty for the nones, 'strong for that sort of work.' Notice the addition Chaucer has to make on account of the rhyme.

1428. 'In the Teseide (IV. 3) Arcite takes the name of Pentheo. The name of Philostrate might be suggested to Chaucer . . . by Boccaccio's poem entitled Philostrato (the original of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde). In the Midsummer Night's Dream . . . a Philostrate (see Dramatis Personæ) is introduced as a . . . servant of Theseus.' — TYRWHITT. This is one of the evidences that Shakspeare was familiar with Chaucer's story.

1448. derre is in the comparative degree, cf. § 125.

1453. what for wo, etc.; the syntax in which 'what' has the sense of 'partly' is still in N.E. use, though the 'what' in N.E. is usually repeated before the second phrase.

1460. it am nat I; in M.E. in such clauses the verb agrees in person with the predicate-pronoun. Chaucer is continually apologizing (he does it again in 1464) for the length of his story; here the apology turns on a humorous exaggeration of Palamon's love-pains.

1466. Merely a distinction between accident and fate. Chaucer was thinking of the relation between Destiny and Providence as described in Boethius, de Cons. Phil. IV., prosa vi.

1491. The student should make a careful study of these beautiful lines, paying especial attention to the rhythm.

1498, 1499. It is possible that the reading of Hn and  $\epsilon$  for 1498 is the correct one, and that in 1499 is or is his has been corrupted into his.

1500. Descriptions of May-day customs will be found in such books as Brand's Popular Antiquities, Dyer's British Popular Customs, Strutt's Sports and Pastimes of the British People, Chambers's Book of Days, Century Dictionary, s.v. May-day.

1502. Chaucer uses the same verse in the Legend of Good Women, which shows that startlyng (skittish) and not stertyng, the supposed correction of H<sub>4</sub>, is the word.
1204, "Vpon a coursere startlyng as the fire,"

1504. were it a myle or tweye, see § 221.

1521. go sithen many yeres, 'these many years ago'; go is here the p. part. Cf. "But sooth is seyde, goon sithen many a day," F 535; "gon ys a grete while," Leg. of G. W., 427.

1522, 1524 are two common M.E. proverbs. The first is found in Ray's Proverbs in the form, "Fields have eyes and woods have ears," 3d ed. p. 112, where a French form is also cited, "Bois ont oreilles et champs oeilles" (the German form is "Das Feld hat Augen der Wald hat Ohren"). In the latter proverb, at unset steuene, means 'at an unappointed hour.'

1532. If crop is not an error for croppes, we have here an instance of a half verse without introductory unstressed syllable, cf. § 260 (b).

1537. hir day, i.e. dies Veneris. The changeableness of Friday weather seems to have been a matter of popular belief in Chaucer's time.

1558. noght worth a myte; Chaucer is possibly alluding to Boccaccio's 'etymology' of Philostrate, 'prostrated by love.'

1566. shapen was my deeth erst than my sherte: i.e. 'before my birth I was destined to die of love.' It seems to have been a common expression. Chaucer uses it in the Legend of Good Women, 2629. It occurs, also, in Lydgate's Complaint of the Black Knight, 489 (Anglia, XIX., p. 269): —

"Er I was borne my destanye was sponne
By Parcas sustren to sle me if they conne,
For they my dethe shopen or (= 'ere') my shert"

(the words of a weebegone lover). Similar phraseology occurs in Troilus and Criseyde, III. 733.

1575. The stress is unusual here: coold swerd; for in M.E., as in N.E., in such a combination more stress falls on the noun than on its adjective. But there are several instances of the reverse in Chaucer, and occasional instances in Shakspeare.

1616. For rhythm, see § 103.

1622. leyd his feith to borwe, 'pledged his honor for surety.'

1625. sooth is seyde, etc. Professor Skeat has cited Chaucer's quotation in the Roman de la Rose, 8487, and this in turn from Ovid, Metamorphoses, II. 846: —

"Non bene conveniunt, nec in una sede morantur Maiestas et Amor."

In the Ms. edition of Chaucer prepared by Franciscus Junius, Ovid, Ars Am. 564, is cited: —

"Non bene cum sociis regna Venusque manent," which is still more apposite.

1638. The simile is from the Teseide, VII. 106. hunters is gen. sing., not nom. plu. For syntax in 1641 ff., see § 188.

1649. They waive formalities in this grim duel. Compare Shakspeare's expression in Macbeth, I. ii. 21 ff.: —

‘ Which (= and he) neer shook hands nor bade farewell to him
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to th' chops.’

1661. In leaving them fighting ankle-deep in gore, Chaucer does not show much consideration for the gentle reader.

1663–1672. This notion of the subordination of Fate to Providence Chaucer gets from Boethius. He uses it again in Troilus, III. 617–619, where Fortune is the servant of God because she is the ‘executrice of wierdes’ (destiny). The passages he draws on are found in de Cons. Phil. IV. prosa vi. (Boece, 1467, Gl. Ch., p. 416): —

“God disponith in his purueaunce . . . the thinges that been to doone ; but he amynistreth . . . by destyne thilke same thinges that he hath disponyd. Cp. also Boece, 1486: And this ilke ordre (i.e. ‘of destyne’) constreyneth the fortunes and the dedes of men by a bond of causes not able to ben unbounde.”

1697. Vnder the sonne is usually taken with looketh to mean he ‘looked out into the sunlight,’ but it can easily go with launde, ‘the glade lying in the sunlight.’ The pause marks in a support the former construction. Compare the M.E. phrases agayn the sonne, ‘in the sunshine,’ agayn the mone (Tro. II. 920), ‘in the moonlight.’

1710. what myster men, ‘what sort of men.’

1743. This is; see § 273.

1755. And saugh, etc., ‘And they looked at their bloody wounds,’ etc.

1761. This seems to have been a proverbial expression. Chaucer makes frequent use of it; cf. Leg. 503, E 1986, F 579. gentil, of course, here means ‘well-born,’ ‘noble.’

1763. in a clause; a has here its meaning of ‘one,’ ‘the same.’

1785. benedicite is here clipped to ben'diste. In Troilus I. 780 (Gl. Ch., p. 449) it is spelled bendiste.

1794. And witen, ‘and they know.’

1799. i.e. ‘Your lover is your only complete fool,’ one of Publius Syrus. Sententiæ (15): “Amare et sapere vix Deo conceditur.” Junius (Ms. edition of Chaucer) cites another, “Amans quid cupiat scit, quid sapiat non videt,” adding a quotation from Plautus, Pseud., Act I., sc. 3, “Non jucundum est nisi amans facit stulla.”

1806. Almost 'But this is the best joke of all.' Theseus' humor is really Chaucer's; see v. 1813.

1811, 1812. Seems to be proverbial philosophy. Cf. the N.E. proverb, "There's no fool like an old fool."

1814. seruant in M.E. is a common term for 'lover.' Cf. the colloquial expression in N.E. 'to wait upon' for 'to pay court to.' oon in this M.E. phrase denotes conspicuousness.

1832. tyme is is an instance of hiatus; cf. § 262.

1838. go pipen in an yuy leef was a M.E. popular expression for making the best of a bad bargain; cf. N.E. 'go whistle.'

1840. Note the humor in this verse.

1841. degree here seems to have the unusual meaning 'relation to me,' and to refer to vv. 1848, 1849.

1850. fer ne ner. Both adjectives are in the comparative degree, and the phrase seems to mean 'exactly,' though it is not found with this meaning in the N.E.D.

1856. That wheither; cf. § 134.

1901. Read: The theatre for to maken etc.; see § 259 (c).

1906. Is an interesting line for text criticism. The original scribe passed over the bracketed letters in 'in [mynde and in] memorie,' his eye catching the second in instead of the first, a common source of error in Mss. The scribe of H<sub>4</sub>, knowing the frequency of such mistakes, saw what the missing words were. But the verse thus written did not seem smooth to his ear (—he is forever tinkering lines that have the extra syllable before the cæsura), and so he put in a the before mynde, and took out the on the before westward.

1914. hadde I foryeten, is subjunctive, 'I came near forgetting.'

1925 ff. A catalogue of abstract qualities personified, as in the Romaunt of the Rose. Such allegorical descriptions were common in Chaucer's time. In v. 1940 Chaucer follows the Romaunt in making Idleness the portress of his garden.

1970–2022. Similar to Teseide, VII. 31–37.

1987. The northern light streaming in at the doors is an addition of Chaucer's. Boccaccio's temple is lighted by the altar fires kindled from the flames of plundered cities.

2004. chirkyng, 'creaking'. It is interesting to note how Chaucer, in order to exaggerate the horror of his description, appeals to the ear as well as to the eye.

2007. The picture of Sisera slain by Jael (Judges iv. 17-22) is used by Chaucer to bring up the idea of horrible murder. He uses it also in D 765. Added to the picture of the blood-stained suicide, with his cut throat and his hair bathed in blood, it is certainly horrible enough.

2017. shippes hoppesteres; hoppystere occurs once in O.E., with the meaning 'dancing-girl' (cf. N.E.D. s.v.). Boccaccio speaks of the Le navi bellatrici being taken as trophies: it has been suggested that Chaucer misread this bellatrici as ballatrici (but it might easily have been written ballatrici in his Ms., as e and a are very liable to confusion in certain fourteenth century hands), and hence his translation. To ballare in Florio's Dictionary is given the meaning to dance, hop.

2021. infortune of Marte; Mars, like Saturn, was one of the 'wikked' planets in astrology, cf. note to 2456. But Chaucer may be referring to an accident in a chariot race in the Campus Martius, and cartere may here mean 'charioteer' and cart 'chariot.'

2024. of Martes diuisioun, because the crafts were under his protection.

2028. Is a reference to the story of Damocles. Chaucer took it from Boethius, de Cons. Phil. III, prosa v., which explains why it is used in connection with conqueste: for Philosophy is there speaking of kings who extend the boundaries of their empires. The lives of such are full of danger. A ruler (tyrannus) who had experienced this danger pictured it 'pendentis supra vertice gladii terrore.' The note to the passage in the Aquinas-commentary which Chaucer was familiar with describes the hanging of the sword in the words "et sibi supra verticem iussit suspendere gladium acutum tenui fili."

2037. The mistake sertres in all the Mss. probably arose from the t having been accidentally dropped in the original copy, and then added above with the caret between the two r's instead of between the s and the e: ser<sup>t</sup>res. To following scribes this looked like a proper name: El and Hn both write it with a capital letter; see the variants.

2040. Chaucer may have intended to insert a story (that of Antony and Cleopatra?) at this point; for the 'oon ensample' is not given.

*

'figures': * * * 'Puella', associated with Venus in astrology, and * * * 'Rubeus', associated with Mars (Prof. Skeat in the Academy, March 2, 1889).

2049. As the cæsura naturally falls after pencil (as in a), it is likely that Chaucer used the other form of the p. part., viz., depeynt and not the depeynted of the Mss.

2056. Calistopee: Callisto was changed into the constellation of Ursa Major; her son was changed into the constellation (sterre) Boötes. It is Ursa Minor, not Ursa Major, that contains the lode-sterre. In Boethius, de Cons. Phil. IV. metr. vi., Ursa is mentioned as moving close to the pole of the universe: the gloss describes the constellation as made up of seven stars near the pole (i.e. Ursa Minor). Chaucer probably thought of this constellation as 'the Bear,' and hence his mistake. The story of Callisto is told in Ovid, Fasti, II. 153-192. (Chaucer's spelling is not yet explained — ? confused with 'Calliope.')

2062 ff. The story of Daphne and Apollo's love for her, and her metamorphosis into a laurel, is found in Ovid, Metamorphoses, I. 450; that of Acteon in Met. III. 138; that of Atalanta in Met. X. 698; that of Meleager in Met. VIII. 299.

2112. that loueth paramours, 'that loves madly'; paramours is an adverb.

2119 ff. som is singular, 'one.'

2122. A cæsura is marked after sheeld in El, Hn. This accounts for the extra syllable.

2125. 'There's no new fashion that has not been an old one,' i.e. these ancient knights had the same sort of equipment that we have — Chaucer's apology for the anachronism.

2141. This goes with the following, not with the preceding, verse.

2160. clooth of Tars was a sort of silk.

2192. euerich at his degree, 'each according to his rank.'

2202. Perhaps the reading of a is correct, and Chaucer refers to skill in dancing to song.

2217. in hir houre; the twelfth conclusion of the second part of the Astrolabe (Gl. Ch., 648) explains Chaucer's meaning here. Each day begins with the hour of the planet which it is named for. Subsequent hours follow according to this series repeated through the twenty-four: 1. Saturnus; 2. Iupiter; 3. Mars; 4. Sol; 5. Venus; 6. Mercurius; 7. Luna. (A gloss on fol. 33 a of Ms. Rawl. D. 913 of the Astrolabe gives this list with the mnemonic SIM SVM, Luna Septima [Ms. Sb, mistake for S<sup>a</sup>] est.) Thus the first hour of Sunday morning would be Sun's hour, the second hour, Venus's, and so on. Venus's hour at the time when Palamon arose would be the twenty-second hour of Sunday, or the second hour before sunrise on Monday (dies lunæ) morning. Emily arose and sought Diana's temple (v. 1274) in her propitious hour, that is, Luna's hour, the first of Monday (dies lunæ). Cf. note to v. 2367.

2271-2360. Palamon's prayer is a close imitation of Teseide, VII. 43-49.

2274. Stress Dyane.

2288. 'On the contrary, it is a good thing for a man to be unhampered in telling a story.'

2294. In Stace of Thebes, 'in Statius's Thebaid.' Chaucer seems anxious that the reader shall consider Statius as his authority rather than Boccaccio. It is a common trick of his thus to mislead the serious-minded student. He is really following the Teseide, VII. 76-90.

2299. Diana was the Proserpina of the under-world. The other "form" referred to in v. 2313 was Luna.

2333, 2334. For rhyme, see § 278.

2367. The nexte houre of Mars folwynge this. 'The nearest hour' of Mars would be the fourth after sunset. See note to v. 2217. This was the propitious time for Arcite's prayer to Mars. For rhythm, see § 260 (b).

2373. Arcite's prayer is found in the Teseide, VII. 23-28.

2396. dooth me . . . endure, 'makes me endure.'

2397. synke or fleete, like ride or go, is a stereotyped expression for to be saved or perish.

2433. and seyde, 'and the voice said.'

2443. Saturn's aspect in astrology was cold. Chaucer translates Boethius, IV. metr. i., iter gelidi senis, "the weie of the olde colde Saturnus" (Boece, 1169, Gl. Ch., p. 404). The gloss to this passage tells us that Saturn is affectiuus gelu et frigoris. Saturn's influence in astrology provoked strife, and hence the reference in 2451, 2456, etc.

2454. His course, according to mediæval astronomy "complet pluri tempore quam sol vel luna."

2456. Chaucer, as we learn from the Astrolabe, was interested in astrology, and intended to write a treatise on the subject. We have here the result of some of his astrological study. The evil influences of Saturn as he gives them are found in the fourth book of the "Paraphrase" of Ptolemæus' Tetrabiblos made by Proclus Diadochus (fifth century A.D.), Chapter IX. (I quote from a mediæval Latin translation):

"Saturnus . . . in Argo navi insistens naufragio exitium minatur," v. 2456; "si in horoscopo alteri luminum opponatur, in carceribus vitam finient," v. 2457; "in quadrato aspectu aut opposito solem intuens . . . mortem adfert suffocatione aut populi tumultibus, aut suspendio, aut strangulatione," vv. 2458-2460; "cum Mercurio configuratus ex venenatorum ictibus . . . mortem designat," v. 2460; "in tropicis signis vel quadrupedibus" (e.g. 'in the leoun') . . . "necem ex ruina significat," vv. 2462-2465 (the period after leoun in the usual punctuation of the text is therefore wrong); "Saturni itaque stella dominium mortis habens, neces ac exitus adfert, morbis diuturnis tabe, . . . febris frigidis, . . . et quotquot frigoris excessu nocumentum afferunt," vv. 2567-2569.

2466. For rhythm, see § 260 (a); compare also § 183.

2491 ff. Chaucer here shows his peculiar power of vivid description. The life and movement in this scene are far superior to Boccaccio's version. Light, color, sound—even the gossip of the crowd—each has its place in the narrative. The bustle and confusion are carried out in the movement of the verse—notice the frequent reversals of the rhythm, the great number of primary and unstressed syllables, and the absence of secondarily stressed ones, the frequency of run-on lines.

2495. The steedes were the war-horses, the palfreys, ordinary saddle-horses or hacks.

2503. Nailynge the speres seems to mean studding them with nails. Shields and other parts of the armor were thus treated, but I cannot find an instance of spears having been so strengthened.

2504. Giggynge (O.Fr. guige), the fittings by which the shield was fastened on the arm.

2516 ff. The keen partisanship of the crowd, as they pick out their favorites, is admirably represented: "Blackbeard is my favorite;" "Baldhead is mine;" "The fellow that looks so grim will be a good fighter;" "Look at that man's battle-axe, it must weigh all of twenty pounds."

2519, 2520. The third person pronoun is here used indefinitely.

2545. The subjunctive is here used as imperative.

2552. The stress upon noght is significant. 'He shall be made prisoner, and not slain, as the custom is.'

2553. Stress ordeyned.

2554. shal, 'must go.'

2581. See vv. 1906 ff.

2602 ff. Notice how the reversals of the rhythm vividly carry out the rapidity of the movement:—

"In goon the speres," etc.

"In gooth the sharpe spore," etc.

"Vp spryngen speres."

"Out goon the swerdes."

"Out brest the blood."

2680–2683. Two lines are inserted here in editions of Chaucer that are evidently a scribe's addition. They are only found in  $\delta$  and  $\epsilon$ .

2683. i.e. he saw no one else just as he loved no one else. In E 241 we have a similar expression:—

'Virtue . . . as wel in chere as dede.'

2712. Charms or incantations were a part of the medical science of Chaucer's time; they are to be found side by side with drug prescriptions in M.E. pharmacopœia.

2725. 'One person captured by twenty knights,' cf. v. 2641.

2726. If the line is right as it stands in the Mss., the unstressed syllable beginning the second half of the line is omitted; but it is more likely that the scribes have neglected the -e of the dative ending preserved in by arme; see § 98.

2731. leet crye . . . the gree, 'issued a proclamation announcing that the contest was a tie.'

2749. Mediæval medicine again: 'vertue expulsative,' or 'animal,' corresponding roughly to power of recuperation.

2761. This al and som, 'this is the whole story.'

2762. For which, 'and for this reason.'

2765 ff. There are few passages in literature more tender and pathetic than these dying words of Arcite. If the student will compare them with the Teseide, X. 54–63, he will see how many human touches Chaucer has given to the scene. The pathos of that 'dwelled in his herte syk and soore,' and the simple beauty of 'his spirit chaunged hous'! Indeed, the passage is so affecting that Chaucer has need, like Shakspeare, to resort to humor, in order to break the strain of it, and so he gives the scene a sudden turn, 2810 ff. : 'I've never been there, and so I can't go any further; I'm neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. Moreover, I cannot find any chapter "On souls" in this Table of Contents.'

2796. shul ben a wyf, 'have it in mind to marry.'

2801. And yet mooreouer, 'and it had advanced still further.' Compare the description of Socrates' death in the Phædo.

2805. Andrew Boorde in his Breuyary (Furnivall, Boorde's Introduction and Dyetary, p. 89) tells us 'the herte is the laste thyng that dothe dye in manne.'

2815. i.e. Arcite is dead; let Mars conduct his soul to the abode of spirits.

2827. From here to the end Chaucer follows Boccaccio pretty closely.

2840. The readings of Hn and H<sub>4</sub> seem to be attempts to supply the unstressed syllable missing at the beginning of the verse.

2854. The scribes probably wrote the syncopated form of the 3d sing. pres. instead of the fuller form casteth.

2889. It is still a military custom to lead the dead officer's horse in his funeral procession.

2895. A bowe Turkeys was of the shape that Cupid is always represented as carrying. Read bowe and the.

2902. the maister strete, 'the high street.'

2923. Note the two reversals in the verse.

2987-3013. This little sermon of Theseus' is taken from Boethius, de Cons. Phil. II., metr. viii., and IV., prosa vi., and III., prosa x.

2987. Firste Moeuere of the cause aboue seems to be a reminiscence of Boece, 1115 (Gl. Ch., p. 401), 'thilke deuyne substaunce tornith the world and the moevable circle of thinges.' The apostrophe itself is imitated from the ninth metre of the third book (Gl. Ch., p. 392), 'O qui perpetua mundum ratione gubernas.' The theology of this Metrum is elaborately explained in the commentary on it. The notions which Chaucer uses are (1) that God is the mover of the primum mobile; (2) that, while the first cause controls everything, God directs everything to its destined end — the supreme good. Hence the rather curious expression of v. 2987. The Metrum goes on to say (in Chaucer's translation) 'thow byndest the elements by nombres proporcionables, that the coolde thinges mowen accord with the hote thinges and the drye thinges with the moyste' (i.e. the four elements). Chaucer substitutes the cheyne of love for 'nombres proporcionables,' making use of Boethius' notion of the immanence of love in the universe, as expressed in Book II., metre viii. (Gl. Ch., p. 379), 'al this accordaunce of thinges is bounde with love.' He then passes on to the notion of the relation between Providence and Destiny, Book IV., prosa vi., 'For purveaunce is thilke deuyne resoun that is establissed in the soueryn prince of thinges.'

2995. this wrecched world adoun, 'this wretched world below.'

2996-3002. A general summary of the doctrine of the relation of Providence to Destiny, as unfolded in Boethius, IV., prosa vi.

3002. A statement from Boethius, V., prosa vi.: 'The commune iugement of alle creatures reasonables thanne is this: that god is eterne' (Boece, 1859).

3007-3010. Boethius' argument for the existence of God in Book III., prosa x.: 'For the nature of thinges ne took nat hir begynnyng of thinges amenused ('deficient') and inparfit, but it procedith of thinges that been alle hole and absolut, and descendith so down into vtereste thinges and into empty and withouten fruyt' (Boece, 889).

3011 ff. Cf. Boece, 1863: 'For alle thing that lyueth in tyme . . . procedith from preterites into futures,' perhaps with Aquinas' gloss: 'infinitam durationem temporis mobilis, i.e. successiui.'

3016. seen at ye, 'see clearly.' But it must be confessed that Theseus' argument is somewhat confused.

3017-3026. These illustrations are not found in Boethius in this form, but the statement in 3029 is; cf. Boece, 1908: 'it byhouith by necessite that alle men ben mortal or dedly.'

3036. God is called the 'prince of alle thinges' in Boece, 891. All things return to him as to their source. He is frequently called the welle of things, the welle of good, in the Boece.

3084. kynges brother sone, see § 97 (b).

THE PROLOGUE OF THE NONNES PRESTES TALE

3957. The Monk has been telling a series of stories about the misfortunes of great men, a sort of De Casibus Virorum Illustrium, of Lucifer, of Adam, of Holofernes, of Samson, of Alexander, of Cæsar, and the rest, 'enough and more besides' in this mournful strain. At length, when forbearance has ceased to be a virtue, the Knight interrupts the Monk's moralizing on the fickleness of fortune as illustrated by the 'tragedie' of Cræsus, with the opening words of our prologue.

3959. 'A little gloom is enough for most people. For my part I like to hear of men who have risen from poverty, men who have climbed to good estate and stayed there.'

3972. The Monk had referred to a definition of Tragedie found in the commentary on Boethius in connection with the story of Cræsus:—

*“Tragedie is to seyn a certeyn storie
As olde bookes maken vs memorie,
Of hym that stood in greet prosperitee
And is yfallen out of heigh degree
Into miserie, and endeth wrecchedly.”*

—B 3163 ff.

(The commentator's nota was, “Tragedia est carmen reprehensiuum viciorum, incipiens a prosperitate desinens in adversitate.”) His last words were about Fortune, covering ‘hire brighte face with a cloude.’ Harry Baily makes fun of this scholastic definition of ‘tragedie’ and such stuff about fortune, with the very practical wisdom, ‘There is no use in crying over spilt milk.’

3989 ff. Note the humor in this remark about the Monk's preaching.

3995. i.e. ‘tell us about something you are familiar with’—a reference to the Monk's fondness for hunting mentioned in the Prologue, with a sly hint at his not being a very good illustration of poverty and misfortune.

4000. “Sir John” was a popular M.E. designation of a priest.

4002. ‘Look pleasant though you are riding such a poor horse. Never mind that, if he serves your purpose, what need you care?’

4005. ‘A merry heart goes all the day.’

4010. Is there not a slightly ironical tone in This sweete preest, ‘This nice little priest,’ with a conciliatory addition, ‘This courteous man, who I'm sure will tell us a good story’?

THE NONNES PREESTES TALE

The story put into the mouth of the Nonnes Preest is an ancient tale which appears in Latin, in English, in German, and in French. The earliest of the French versions is one by Marie de France (thirteenth century); it professes to be a translation from English, and in some Mss. of the tale Li reis Alured (King Alfred) is cited as the author of the story. Later it was expanded in a version which forms part of Le

Roman du Renart. Chaucer's story is more like this latter. (See Chaucer Society Originals and Analogues; p. 111 ff.)

4041. orgon, a plural noun in M.E. (Lat. organa).

4045-4048. Chaucer says that he not only was as sure as a clock in his crowing, but he also knew what he was about, and was as good as an astrolabe, knowing the hours for the latitude he lived in. Astrolabes had to be adapted to a given latitude, and were useless outside of it.

4049. fyn coral, from the dropping of the inflectional syllable, seems to be a compound noun.

4056. For rhythm, see § 259 (b).

4060. For the definite form of fair, see § 115 (d).

4069. In the Athenæum for October 24, 1896, p. 566, Professor Skeat communicates a stanza of this song from Ms. Trinity (Camb.?) R. 3. 19, folio 154:

“ My lefe is faren in lond
 Allas why ys she so,
 And I am so sore bound
 I may not come her to.
 She hath my hert in hold
 Where euer she ryde or go,
 With trew[e] loue a thousand fold.”

vv. 4064, 4065 contain an allusion to the fifth line.

complecciouns, ‘collections of humors.’ Chaucer treats this subject more at length in the opening lines of the Hous of Fame (Gl. Ch., p. 558).

4118. The rede Colera was one of the four humors, the excess of any one of which caused disease. They were sanguis, cholera, melancholia, and phlegma, cf. A 587, A 335, A 625.

4121. rede beestes, like the fox.

4131. a quotation from Cato's Distiches. In the M.E. translation of Liber Catonis, edited by Goldberg (Anglia, Vol. VII.), vv. 401, 402 (p. 174), occurs:

“ þing þat þe mette in sweuene

corresponding to the Cato, de Moribus, II. 31: somnia ne cures.

4151. Dame Pertelot's prescription is quite correct according to mediæval practice. Catapuce is the chief ingredient of a laxative in Mitteleng. Medicinbuch, p. 134. We have also the statement that "Fumiter ageyn feuerys terciā is a souereyn medicin," in Anglia, XVIII. p. 330.

4156. The rhythm, if we may read herbyue, is normal; if herbyue, see § 259 (b).

ther mery is: this phrase is usually rendered 'where pleasure is.' But mery as a substantive is unusual, to say the least, and makes but lame sense. The word mery (N.E. 'marrow') frequently in M.E. refers to the interior part of berry-like fruits. In Palladius, IV. 177, the word describes the pulp of a lime. It also refers to the tender shoots at the end of branches. With either of these meanings the passage makes good sense. The or for of in Gg and Pe may be a trace of the original reading.

4157. The rhythm of the verse is:

' x " ' . x x ' x ' x '

Pekke hem vp right as they growe and ete hem yn (§ 259 (c)); or possibly,

" x ' . " ' x '

Pekke hem vp right as they growe, etc. (§ 259 (b)).

4172. 'We need not argue the matter, it is self-evident.'

4174. Oon of the gretteste auctour that men rede is common M.E. syntax. The N.E. idiom demands the plural. Chaucer evidently refers to Valerius Maximus (de Somniis), who tells the stories that follow, and points the reference by an allusion to 'Maximus' in his 'gretteste.' Cicero (de Divinatione, I. 27) also relates them. It is likely, however, that Valerius Maximus is either quoted at second hand, or is given as the source with the intention of misleading the reader. (See the monograph of Miss K. O. Petersen, On the Sources of the Nonne Prestes Tale, Boston, 1898.)

4226. Note how ε alters the verse to get rid of the two unstressed syllables at the beginning of the second half-verse.

4232. The line is an Alexandrine. Again ε tries to get rid of the irregularity. If there is any error in the original it is more likely that he has intruded than that heere has.

4254. rede, 'read about.'

4268. agayn the day, 'toward daybreak.'

4300. The Legend of St. Kenelm is told by Florence of Worcester.

See Freeman, Old English History, p. 87. Chaucer probably refers to one of the later versions like those found in the fifteenth century legendaries, which add the incident of the dream.

4306. to kepe hym weel, etc., 'guard himself carefully against treason.'

4310. I hadde leuere than my sherte, 'I would give my boots.'

4314. Chaucer here, as in the Parlement of Foules, 96 ff., refers to Macrobius' Commentary on Cicero's Somnium Scipionis (Africani), a mediæval classic on the subject of dreams; this and the scriptural references which follow he probably quotes at second-hand. Miss Petersen (in the work cited above) has shown good reason to think that for these references, as well as for the Valerius story, Chaucer was indebted to a fourteenth-century commentary by Richard Holkot.

4318. See Daniel vii. 1-15.

4320. See Genesis xxxvii. 5-10.

4323. See Genesis xli. 1-7.

4324. See Genesis xl.

4328. The dream of Cræsus is told in the Commentary on Boethius, de Cons. Phil. II., prosa ii. "One night Cræsus dreamed that he was on a high tree, where he was made wet by Jupiter and dried by Phœbus. When he related this dream to his daughter, Fania, she said, 'You will be captured by Cyrus and hanged on a cross, where the rain will moisten you and the sun will dry you.'" Chaucer tells the story at length in B 3930-3948 (Gl. Ch., p. 131), having taken it from the Boethius Commentary.

4331. Andromache's dream forms a part of the mediæval version of the Troy legend.

4344. Chaunticleer evidently did not like bad-tasting medicines.

4366. 'Royally' brave with the coming of the daylight.

4377. It was a mediæval tradition that the world was created in March.

4380. A mock importance is given to the tragedy which follows by this circumstantial detail.

4384. Taking the 'degree of the sun,' as given in v. 4385, and the sun's altitude, given in 4389, and applying the 3d Conclusio of Pt. II. of Chaucer's Astrolabe (Gl. Ch., p. 644), we find the 'label sitting in the bordure vpon a capital letter that is clepid an X,' i.e. it was about nine o'clock, and the day of the month must have been May 3. This makes it difficult to explain 'syn Marche began,' a difficulty which the scribe of H<sub>4</sub> noticed and attempted to remedy; see variant reading. We should expect ended. Could Chaucer have written Syn Marche ys (or ? be) gon? 'March having passed by.' Cf. note on v. 1521. This is one of the many instances in the Canterbury Tales which shows Chaucer's care in unimportant details. Cf. the similar notation of time in B 1-15.

4401 ff. is, of course, ironical, and a sly allusion to the popularity of romances among women.

4417. Genyloun. For the story of Genyloun's betrayal of Roland, see Caxton's Lyf of Charles the Grete, ed. Herrtage, for the E.E.T.S., Pt. II., p. 230 ff.

4431 ff. Chaucer refers to the question of foreordination and free will discussed in Boethius, de Cons. Phil. V., prosa 6. Augustine is St. Augustine (fourth century), who treats this subject in the fifth book of his de Civitate Dei. Thomas Bradwardyn was a Merton Professor of Divinity and Archbishop of Canterbury of the fourteenth century, who discussed the question of providence and free will in his de Causa Dei. He also, according to Pitseus, wrote a separate tract, de Præsentia et Predestinatione.

4440. This doctrine of necessitie condicionel is found in Boethius; cf. the Boece, 1908, 1909 (Gl. Ch., p. 436): "For certes ther ben two maneris of necessites: that oon necessite is symple, as thus; that it byhouith by necessite that alle men ben mortal or dedly; another necessite is condicionel as thus: yif thou wost that a man walketh it byhouith by necessite that he walke." In Troilus and Creiseyde, IV. 960 ff. (Gl. Ch., p. 522), Chaucer 'has to doon of swich matere' in extenso.

4441-4445. A gallant apology, surely, but has it not a touch of irony withal?

4461. The 'Physiologus' was a Latin collection of allegorical fables, widely current in mediæval literature. It was translated into Old French, German, and Old English. Tyrwhitt quotes the few verses from the chapter de Sirenis which Chaucer refers to: —

" Sirenæ sunt monstra maris resonantia magnis Vocibus et modalis cantus formantia multis."

4484. Boethius was the author of a tract, de Musica.

4502. The story is told in the Speculum Stultorum, a satirical poem written by Nigellus Wireker (thirteenth century) under the pseudonym Burnellus; burnellus is mediæval Latin for 'donkey' (e.g. Ms. B. M. Royal, 17 C. xvii., has 'hic burnellus, a lytyl asse'), hence Chaucer's allusion. The loss of the benefice was due to the cock's being late in his crowing on the morning that the priest was to be ordained, so that the candidate missed the ceremony.

4537. As Tyrwhitt pointed out, Geoffrey de Vinsauf published a poem not long after the death of Richard I., in which he apostrophized Friday (dies Veneris) as being the instrument of the king's death.

4585. Chaucer refers to 'Jack Straw's rebellion,' 1381, in which many of the Flemish merchants of London were dragged into the streets and slain.

4608. Seems to be another instance of omission of unstressed syllable in the cæsura.

4631. 2 Timothy iii. 16, is the text which Chaucer refers to.

4635. In the margin of a appears the note, Dominus archiepiscopus Cantuariensis, probably a reference to this form of benediction as being peculiar to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

GLOSSARY

To put the whole vocabulary of Chaucer, with all its varying forms and varying meanings, into a glossary like this would require the allotment to it of a disproportionate space in the book. Only such words, therefore, as are quite different in form and meaning from the corresponding N.E. words will be found here. But the student must not infer that in cases where the text word does not appear in the glossary its meaning is therefore exactly the same as that of the N.E. word which corresponds to it. Various inflectional forms, especially those of the strong verbs, will be found in the index to the Grammar. O.E., O.N., and O.Fr. forms have been added for practise in phonology. Unmarked vowels in stressed syllables are short.  $\bar{o}u$  represents  $\bar{u}$ : to distinguish between  $\bar{o}$  and  $\bar{u}$  written as  $\bar{o}$ , the student must trust to his knowledge of the grammar.

- a, an unstressed form of  $\bar{a}n$ ; 2766, 2725; see § 117.
- a, a-, an unstressed form of on, 1621, 2934.

THE WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

EDITED BY

ALFRED W. POLLARD,

H. FRANK HEATH,

MARK H. LIDDELL.

W. S. MCCORMICK.

Globe 8vo. Cloth. $1.25, net.

Originally entrusted to the late Mr. Henry Bradshaw, and then to Mr. Bradshaw and Dr. Furnivall in conjunction, after Mr. Bradshaw's death the work was taken up, at Dr. Furnivall's request, by Mr. Alfred W. Pollard, the Editor of English Miracle Plays and the "Eversley Edition" of the Canterbury Tales, and author of the Chaucer Primer. Reserving for himself the general editorship and the preparation of the text of the Canterbury Tales and Legend of Good Women, Mr. Pollard has been fortunate enough to secure the help of three scholars, each of whom had made a special study of a different section of Chaucer's work, and who were in hearty agreement with him on all general principles. The Hous of Fame, Parlement of Foules, and Minor Poems have thus been entrusted to Dr. Frank Heath; the Boece, Astrolabe, and Romaunt of the Rose to Professor Liddell; and the Troilus and Creseyde to Professor McCormick. In the case of most of these pieces, numerous unprinted manuscripts, in addition to those published by the Chaucer Society, have been examined, and the result is a series of new texts, differing in many important passages from any yet published, and recording a large number of readings of literary interest hitherto overlooked. Despite the necessity for severe compression, room has been found for a critical collation, varying in fulness with the needs of each poem, and also for a sufficiency of illustrative and explanatory notes. The GLOBE CHAUCER will be the first single volume edition of the poet's works in which such an apparatus has been provided.

The spelling used in this edition follows that of the different manuscripts from which the text has been constructed, with only a minimum of modification, and without any attempt to conceal the fact that we owe the preservation of Chaucer's works to a number of different scribes, and that our present knowledge only takes us a very little way toward the spelling (itself certainly not uniform) which the poet himself may have used.

As a help to scansion, the e-final, which is so important an element in Chaucer's verse, is marked wherever it is to be fully sounded, and stressed syllables are also indicated.

The Globe Edition contains also an adequate Glossary, with references, and a Life of Chaucer, both by the General Editor, with special introductions to each of the poems or prose pieces by their respective editors, setting forth briefly what is known as to their origin and date, and describing the relations of the manuscript authorities for the text.
